Multiple numbers have overlaying patterns and each is unique and different from the others, yet contains the same elements.

Now we will look at a Twelve Multiple (12's) which is a combination of the 3's and 4's.

Twelve Multiple (12's)

Can you see the elements of both numbers in the pattern? Think about what a 12 vibration involves as compared to an 8 or 5?

Here are the patterns for the numbers 1 – 9: (The Two (2's) pattern is a checker board pattern and the One (1's) pattern is a full pattern, though they appear similar below.)

You may have wondered what would have happened if we had started with a zero in the center of the grid instead of the one. Here are a couple of grids starting with zero, what do you think?

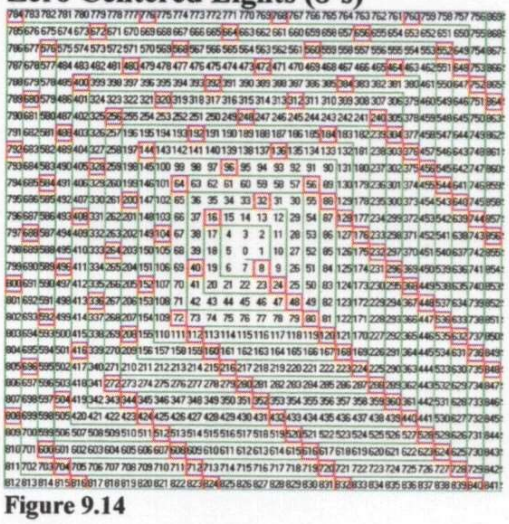

Zero Centered Three (3'S)

Zero Centered Fours (4's)

Zero Centered Eights (8's)

Zero Centered Nines (9's)

As you can see, the pattern is maintained even when we shift the numbers on the grid, this is something to think about if you want. Understanding vibration is our key to unlocking this seeming mystery of time, space, motion and creation.

All of the external processes in Part one of this book reflect a way to create with the Law of Vibration. These external possibilities can become core beliefs that we use to substantiate our perception in time/space. The internal processes in Part two are the means of creation and how we make use of these core beliefs as creation platforms to combine with desires of matching energy.

In nature this combining of old with new, of established form with new creation is a simple process and it brings newness without effort. If it matches it works, if it doesn't match it doesn't work, and in some cases it will even destroy part or the entire original. Nature is very precise about what can be combined and what can't.

In our creation process within our selves, we are using the same Law and must also do our combining of energies with the same degree of preciseness. We must be willing to establish core beliefs that can combine with the new desires and to also let go of old core beliefs that don't match our present desires. Therefore it is important to understand the significance of numbers being core beliefs in our awareness and how they must be combined in precise alignment with the vibrational structure of the new creation we want to create.

What lies within us

Ralph Waldo Emerson

Gann wrote his books knowing everything is a cycle and nothing is new, that it will repeat itself. He wrote about the daily and weekly movements of the different markets, knowing that they will do it again and anyone wise enough to see it would have a book that foretold the future. Any history is a revelation that will come to pass as the future unveiling in the present.

Any point (#) can be justified by mathematics to every other point, (everything is part of the whole and harmonically linked) so to figure out what happened afterward is easy. To know where something is going to be in the future by mathematics or angles or astrology or anything is not as easy because every real point can be proven and there are many! The simplest solution is the best.

The nature of life is not a complex maze of hard to solve probabilities but of the most sublime simplicity by a benevolent creator (whether this creator is you, God, Oneness, Source, the Universe, it doesn't really matter because if creation occurs it will be in harmony with the rest of creation and that is sublime simplicity, nothing added or subtracted, gained or lost, all is perfection.). Everything is always available, all the truth, we just don't know how to look. We must ask questions then find answers, and what we have lost, we must find.

In truth, nothing can be hidden because all is one, connected, whole, and together. The reason for not seeing the future as easily as the past is because we don't realize the future "is" the past. Remember all is one, but when the thought of two is held then the truth is not recognized in it's wholeness of one. There is truth of a 1 and a truth of a 2 and the 1 is known but the 2 is not known so we then believe there is "more" and we go through out our creation of time, past, present, future searching for the answer to our question, finding what was lost, experiencing a part of the whole, looking for the "more".

The spin of the Universe to our partial perception is let's say clockwise in a spiral. Did it ever occur that to be balanced there must be a counter-rotational movement (counter-clockwise) necessary to balance it as a whole? But we only see the part we see and assume it is real and whole. There could be infinite planes or dimensions of reality and we see only this rotating spiral.

So yes there is the possibility in this construct of many questions and many things to look for. But consider the query that all is one in everything (even what we call a part) as a fractal seems unique and different from the next iteration, yet it resolves into the same one, it only takes what we call time for the resolution to prove the truth of its nature.

We call it a vibration or signature and we are only looking at the first few notes or letters. Ever try to guess what a song is by the first note or two, or a word from a couple of letters. Yet when it's played or spelled out in full it becomes recognizable. (Oh yea, it is John Doe, I see now, at first I wondered what "ohn" was.)
So in our observation of a galactic clockwise rotation of bodies, is it possible the rest of the story will reveal the truth also, the contra-clockwise rotation of an equal number of balancing bodies would seem to form a simple solution (this law of - for every action there is an equal and opposite reaction) of bringing back together the parts to make the whole (One) the 1 & 2 to be the One again.

So having found this equalizing set of galactic forces and bodies, we may not have to. Life is very simple; it is one. So there is never anything we need to look for, the search for something else is only a playful illusion that is experienced. Gann may have seen the simplicity of life and noticed that time is really One too.

Everything has got to be One or it isn't, time is no different, the past is part of time, the future is part of time, bringing the past back to wholeness seems like it would be adding a 1 and a 2 and making a one again, but the simple possibility is that the past is 1 and future is 1 and together it is still 1.

That seems to be very simplistic! Gann wrote books about trading with lots of rules and things to do and yet he included in his books a very detailed history of past market highs and lows and to many it seems inordinately repetitive and a waste of time and space that could have been spent on something more germane.

Maybe Gann gave what people wanted to see and that is the rules and things to do to figure it out. But if one looks at what W.D. said in many different ways (nothing new under heaven, as above so below, everything is a cycle or repetition of the past) it may have been that he was really showing how to see the market unfolding just like it is unfolding here in a book.

It isn't going to do it another way, it is going to do it this way, can you see it. He was literally showing the future and there is no figuring it out to be done, only recognizing what it is you're seeing. How simple is that.

The vibration or signature of soybeans is spelled out "soybeans-soybeans-soybeans" or wheat is spelled out "wheat-wheat-wheat", DJIA is "DJIA-DJIA-DJIA" and IBM is "IBM-IBM-IBM". All are different, they have to be, and all are repetitive and cyclic, they have to be or they aren't what they are.

Do you see it; it is very, very simple. Each can only be what it is and it has to be it over and over and over or it is not what it is. So the critical part is to first know what you are looking at, how it spells its name, what is the pattern of its signature; if in a chart then what is the recurring pattern that spells its name.

Some patterns may be like a long moving fractal design that seems to evolve through many different forms yet if one waits the repetitive cycle is revealed and that is the signature. It's just a matter of learning how to read the language it's written in. Corn can be spelled many ways, in many languages. What ever medium you are observing the entity in, is the language you must learn to see it.

Mathematical relationships will be present in all real entities and not necessarily separate, one from the other. So to see the unique path of the one you are interested in you must pay attention to it and observe its past motions. These motions define it and will reveal its future.

Gann showed some of the different ways it can be written, but the point is that no matter how it is written, it is simply 1, 1,1,1,1,1,1,1… Once you see that the bird flying in the air is a duck, you find it easy to recognize the duck even in a flock of different birds. First you must recognize the entity, the living conscious entity known as wheat, soybeans, DJIA, IBM; then the simplicity of life reveals that the past is the future and a cycle is recognized.

One day I watched the wind blowing in the trees. There were several trees growing quite close together; tall firs and cedars, shorter big leafed deciduous trees, smaller bushy ones near the ground. As the wind blew, it seemed to cause motion to all the trees but in a peculiar way.

One time it seemed to start near the ground and swirl upward, causing the small bushy branches to move first and in an upward motion, as they reached their limit they would naturally spring back only to be caught by the wind again in the upward swing. Back and forth the branches and leaves were swaying in a very rhythmic and balanced motion, matching the forces of the wind and the internal stresses within the structure of the plant. As one force was greater it would overcome the other, back and forth, back and forth.

This would happen in all the trees, this inherent moving to a limit because of the force of the wind and then moving back because of the internal release of energy within the branch. On larger or smaller branches the phase of the swing up and down had different intervals. The smaller branches moved in a faster rhythm because the wind pushed them to their limit in a shorter amount of time than the heavier ones.

So the composite motion on this one tree had many different branches moving in the same wind but all to their own music so to speak; different directions, speeds, and frequencies. When the wind stopped the tree would return to a stasis with the current energies then present.

As I continued to watch I noticed more. I saw that the movement of the taller trees had a different rhythm than the ones nearer the ground. The size of the branches made for variation but so to do the shape of the leaves or needles and/or lack of them. As I watched I seemed to compare the motion of the wind in all these trees like a symphony being played, with many different instruments playing in many different ranges and at different volumes and rhythms, yet all was the result of the same wind.

I see that the markets we trade are like this too. There is indeed a larger energy that moves the individual parts but in individual ways and it is a function of the form that determines the frequency of modulation, the cycle of movement back and forth. That one stock may have a form that is perhaps smaller or more compact and thus less likely to move the same as another that is more large or broad in form and thus affected by the energy (wind) more, greater swings or longer cycles or something unique to it and different than the other, yet both being blown by the same wind.

If I sat under the trees long enough and observed how one particular tree is blown in the wind then after enough study I could begin to predict the probable cycle of movement. I could then watch another tree and learn the probable movement of that one too. (* See Appendix C 1.11 Papillon)

What I can't expect to do is just look at the trees and expect to understand their movement in the wind, without knowing the different structures of both the wind and the trees. I can't look in a general way and expect to trade the individual stocks or commodities in a specific way. To predict the movement of a particular branch or leaf without noticing how it sways in the present wind.

Being specific and clearly identifying the part one is forecasting in the current energy flow is how one can know the outcome if all the action leading up to that point is the same as similar past events that showed up in your prior investigations. For every action there is a reaction, and a unique action will create a unique result over and over if the variables are constant. Energy patterns will draw matching energy patterns and a repetitive movement will be observed.

If the wind blows this way against the branch it will always move this high for this long and then spring back this way, this fast, this far. Unless the branch has changed or another energy source is affecting it, it will be predictable. If there is another influence then I will notice it, add it to my study notes and be prepared to see more next time.

I must always be aware of that part I haven't seen, but in most cases the amount of study I have logged in will be in direct proportion to how accurate my forecast is. Always watch for more but there is a time when enough is known to trade profitably and with proper stop loss methods and a system for taking profit and managing capital, I'll have a predictable income.

W.D. Gann devoted 10 years to specifically studying the markets (though he continued to study for the rest of his life). He was willing to see what he was looking at; he had a passion to understand it and gave it time to realize. We can spend 10 years or a lifetime in understanding the external or we can look within and perhaps find our way a little sooner.

As we come to know the Law of Vibration, that it is a natural law bound to the laws and rules of a consistent and balanced Universe we can realize the creative process it engenders. We move from the external limits of what is, to the unlimited possibility of what can be. We begin to see that natural law works for us as well as everything else. It must act in this way or the Universe we are observing would cease to be, it would not remain in form without this cyclical pattern repeating in a lawful and reliable way.

Knowing this, we can be confident in our creative pursuits, because we can know that if these laws are understood and followed, they will produce what we desire. Knowing what these laws are is the key.

By now you should be aware of how things work in this world - if you have been paying attention. The problem with most of us is that we haven't been. We have been looking at the results of what is going on here instead of paying attention to what is making it happen.

We are lazy in a sense, just content to watch the show that is unfolding instead of wanting to figure out how to make the show. We are so entertained with the amazing abundance of the present moment that we seemed hypnotized and unable to look at what isn't here, namely the future.

We looked as a small child and people told us to stop day dreaming, to get real and come back to earth, be good, keep their rules, and be quiet. We learned to go to sleep as to what we really came here to do.

We didn't come here to see an old movie, a story of the past, we already know that stuff. We came here to create something new, to be a story unto our self; to be our story, not someone else's. Are you ready to be your own story and gift to the world your contribution of your uniqueness? Here are the rules, and they are as easy or hard as you want to make them. For in truth you are making the rules.

Hard to believe, you are making the rules? If it is, then this is a clue that you don't understand the first rule. Rule number one. This is your Universe and you are the one creating it, either by conscious volition or by default. Conscious volition is called desires, wishes, imaginings, and wants. Default is watching the old movie of what has already been created, namely the present moment. Living in the present moment is easy; it is easy for a reason because it is our default mold when we fall asleep to what we could be doing.

This second part of the book is about doing it your way, creating what you want and allowing desires to manifest and form in this space/time reality we are calling the present moment. The first part was the external, those things that are already a done deal, already been done so we can experience them again. Other people's creations set in time for us to re-experience if we choose. It is a sublime experience and we do it all the time, but now we are looking at something else, something new, our creation that is not realized yet, it is still in what we call the future.

So this second part will provide ways to approach this internal and it doesn't have a right or wrong way, just a possibility if one chooses it. Relax what you think you know and allow the rest of the story to come in front of you and see what of it you want. It is yours for the taking. It is yours for the leaving, it is yours either way. Enjoy the journey, we call it life.

Chapter 10

Creation Cycle of Vibration

In character
In manner
In style
In all things
The supreme excellence
Is simplicity

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

Creation is the flow from something to something else, from this thing to another thing, from this to that. It is the flow in what we call separation (2 things). Things can't be things unless there is more than one. As soon as we have at least 2 things we can have movement, time. "Space" is three things: 3D.

It isn't important that there is "a" truth or right way to think of something, because there are an infinite number of ways, but it is necessary that one's beliefs match ones desires, to have the creation process be able to bring about your desires because they will be made in the matrix of your beliefs.

A matrix of abundance beliefs will create abundant desires but not scarcity desires, and a matrix of scarcity beliefs will produce scarcity desires not abundant desires. The vibrational patterns of abundance and scarcity are very different. A straight edge ruler will not make a curved line and a compass or curved form will not trace a straight line.

Creation cycles can be seen in many ways. First we remember that creation is something new or different from the original. Let's say we have nothing and from this nothing we create something. This would be like having a zero and then we create number one, the one is the new creation.

So if this one disappears and we return to zero, then our cycle is complete. If our one remains and we create it again, then we are not complete but are experiencing an ongoing cycle. This would look like: 0,1,1,1,1,1…. The completed cycle would look like 0,1,0. This type of cycle is very simple, it has only one new thing and either repeats or completes.

Let's look at another one, this time let's start with nothing and create a one, but this time let's allow the one to combine with one of our prior elements (in this case we have a zero and a one), so we can see a pattern of 0,1,1+0, 1+1. Now we have another new element, 1+1. We can leave it as 1+1 or we can call it 2. In either case we now have three elements and our possibilities for creating become more complex.

If we continue we would next have the possibility of 0,1,1+1, 1+1+1 (or 2+1). This type of creation is now an endless chain and forms an infinite set of possibilities. 0,1,2,3,4,5,…. It also forms an irregular set that could be of the form, 0,1,2,3,2,5,2,1,6,3,3,…depending on which elements we combine, and this set is not easily predicted. If on the other hand we have a set of elements that create to a certain pattern, then we may be able to form a prediction process of determining what the next element or new creation will be.

For instance, if we have a pattern of using only the most recent creations as elements we combine to create from, then we have what is known as a Fibonacci series and would look like this: 0,1,1,2,3,5,8,13,21,….. This set will continue without end and will be predictable. Another pattern that may be present in creation could be harmonic intervals or mathematical ratios and progressions. These could look like, 0,1,2,4,8,16,32,… (this is the combining of the last element to itself causing a doubling pattern. Another could be 0,1,2,3,6,10,22,44,86,….where the creation is the combining of all the elements to create the next. We could go on to find an endless array of combinations of elements to form a creation process so let's stop here and see what we have found.

First, we see that for a creation cycle to be predictable it must have a pattern that is consistent and not random. Random creations are unpredictable by definition. That leads us to an observation: if a creation is unpredictable or without a pattern then it isn't information we want to collect in our predictive system. If a creation cycle is consistent and has a regular pattern of movement with time and space, then we can use this to understand what is in the future and in the past.

Since we may want to have control of what the future is bringing us, we need to understand the process we are using to sustain the present experience and how new (future) experiences come into being and become our present experience. If we say the past is a set of vibrational patterns that we have experienced and we recall these experiences in our mind as memory, then we could say the past is stored in our mind, physically in our brain or in cellular materials capable of storing vibrational patterns.

We call these stored vibrational patterns thoughts or concepts, maybe even stories and full blown personal movies of our experience recorded in the mind. Whatever form they seem to take we only have access to them if we believe they happened.

Thoughts that are not true for us are not part of our belief system, and memories are stored in our beliefs. If you don't believe you walked out the door just a few minutes ago, you don't have a memory of it either. If you don't believe you went to sleep last night, you don't have a memory telling you that you did. Beliefs and memory are interrelated if not the same thing. So beliefs and memory are the past.

The future is a different element in our mind, it may be something we believe is true, but we know it is true through our beliefs, through the past. The only truth we know is a comparison, either of a past element to a past element, a past element to the present or a past element to a future element. The reason I say it is only to the past and not to the present, because we can't know the present without comparison, and so it reverts to the past immediately.

This reference point of comparison of a future element to the past is called a desire. A desire hasn't happened yet, it is believed to be possible and true if we have a related past belief that is similar enough to support its validity. To support its creation into this space/time environment we are experiencing. So let's consider this bridge between beliefs and desires and come to know how we move through this present moment or what we call time.

We are going to talk about two very important elements in our thinking process, and until we understand how their interaction is the basis of the creation process we will never be able to consciously create with any degree of consistent precision or success. I would venture to say that very few are aware of the connection between our beliefs and desires in the creation process and that there exists a bridge between the two that is the platform we stand on to experience our creations in this time and space existence.

The bridge spans from our foundational beliefs held in our memory, physical brain, mind or whatever we consider as the holder of thought or ideas. Beliefs are old thoughts used repeatedly and held as the basis for determining and knowing our reality. So in this context, beliefs are thoughts from the past used to connect to the present and by the process of comparison, determine what we know.

Desires are thoughts of future experiences or events that we use to direct our movement into the future. So if we place beliefs on our path, they would be rooted in the past and desires would be in the future and the bridge this forms would be spanning what we call the present. Past beliefs and future desires are the underpinnings of our creation process in reality, and this foundation for creating in this present moment, must evolve from this matrix.

So what? Why is this important? Why are we taking up space on these pages and time to read something about old beliefs and unfulfilled desires? Well, let's see. If we are to have a say in what happens to us, then we must be able to know when we can and can't determine our experience. When we can ask for something and get it and when we ask for something and not get it.

When we can go into a trade and know we will be profitable and when we go into one and we don't know. Which are we more familiar with? Probably going into the future with less than 100% assurance we will obtain a desired result. But this could be something we can learn about here and eventually come to a place where we approach this surety, this fulfilling of our dreams on demand.

What do you wish for? You probably have a notion if you are going to get it or not. You can probably tell yourself before even reading on, whether you're really going to get what you want. What we may not understand though, is if I already have a hunch I won't be getting what I want, then how can I change something and get it? This is what we can come to know and then give to us our desires, wants and wishes.

Let's talk about beliefs first, and see what the word may mean? If we look in the dictionary we find:

Belief:

Pronunciation: `b&-'lEf`
Function: noun
Etymology: Middle English beleave, probably alteration of Old English gelEafa, from ge-, associative prefix + lEafa; akin to Old English lyfan -- more at BELIEVE

1 : a state or habit of mind in which trust or confidence is placed in some person or thing
2 : something believed; especially : a tenet or body of tenets held by a group
3 : conviction of the truth of some statement or the reality of some being or phenomenon especially when based on examination of evidence

Looking at the word a little more cryptically we may find some more possibilities. If we divide the word into two parts; be –"lief" and notice that "lief" is very close to "life" then perhaps we could say a belief = be life, and using another form of belief (believe) we can see that it becomes "be live" and we have an apparent process held within the meaning of the words, belief and believe, to become alive or to become life. This is a very powerful possibility if we follow it to have a literal meaning. A belief is a process to be life or to live in life here in this be-ing-ness.

Let's carry this a little farther and see that belief is a process of thinking or holding a thought that will bring it into existence or into life here in our be-ing or reality. To bring a thought into reality and let it live in this existence by holding it in our mind as a belief.

If a thought comes into our mind and passes right out, it doesn't have time to stay, or to "be" and so doesn't become a-live or have life. When a thought comes into ones mind and stays, or we give it time and space to exist within our awareness, then it exists in reality within us and it receives life from us and lives until we stop paying attention to it. This process of giving attention to a thought over and over creates what we call a belief. A thought repeated over and over, giving it energy and life creates a pattern in our mind that is easy to remember, easy to access and so is what we will use as a foundation in our thinking process or creation process.

Let's go to desires for a few minutes and then see what bridges these two together. A desire as found in a dictionary definition is:

Desire:

Pronunciation: di-'zI(-&)r, dE-
Function: verb
Inflected Form(s): de·sired; de·sir·ing
Etymology: Middle English, from Anglo-French desirer, from Latin desiderare, from de- + sider-, sidus heavenly body
transitive verb
1 : to long or hope for : exhibit or feel desire for <desire success>
2 a : to express a wish for : REQUEST <they desire an immediate answer> b archaic : to express a wish to : ASK
3 obsolete : INVITE 4 archaic : to feel the loss of intransitive verb : to have or feel desire

synonyms DESIRE, WISH, WANT, CRAVE, COVET

Function: noun
1 : conscious impulse toward something that promises enjoyment or satisfaction in its attainment
2 a : LONGING, CRAVING b : sexual urge or appetite
3 : a usually formal request or petition for some action
4 : something desired

Again looking at a cryptic view of the word we see that it is again two parts. One is "de" and the other is "sire". "de" means "of" and "sire" is to father or create, so desire equals of fathering or creating. Creation is the process of bringing newness into awareness, and we do that by wanting, by desiring.

As we look at the rest of the creation process, we will come to see that for us to experience it in this time/space environment, we need to establish it's roots in time and space and maintain that unique vibrational entity in a complete and balanced cyclic motion of periodic resonance. We will go into detail on how we do this in the rest of the book. So relax and let what is presented be a possibility and at the end there will be a new awareness and a potential for a stable platform to create from.

Next are several definitions of the forms of the word "vibration or vibrate". Because we are not going to create tunnel vision to see this concept, but leave it open to many possibilities, read these definitions with a desire to allow all of their diversity to be available for our use. We do not want to limit our self in creation, but to become unlimited and able to have control and a decisive management of it. With all of its potential we possess the abundance of all that is; with a limited viewpoint we are restricted and will experience failure in many of our endeavors. This is the foundation we are building and so do not leave anything out now because it doesn't make sense right now, it will later.

Vibration:

Pronunciation: `vI-'brA-sh&n`
Function: noun
1 a : a periodic motion of the particles of an elastic body or medium in alternately opposite directions from the position of equilibrium when that equilibrium has been disturbed (as when a stretched cord produces musical tones or molecules in the air transmit sounds to the ear) b : the action of vibrating : the state of being vibrated or in vibratory motion: as (1) : OSCILLATION (2) : a quivering or trembling motion : QUIVER
2 : an instance of vibration
3 : vacillation in opinion or action : WAVERING
4 a : a characteristic emanation, aura, or spirit that infuses or vitalizes someone or something and that can be instinctively sensed or experienced -- often used in plural b : a distinctive usually emotional atmosphere capable of being sensed -- usually used in plural

Sympathetic Vibration:

Function: noun
: a vibration produced in one body by the vibrations of exactly the same period in a neighboring body

We could spend a whole book here, because it is so pertinent to the function of vibration that we are experiencing here in space/time reality. Sympathetic vibration is the transference quality of one vibration to another. The main caveat is that the resultant vibration created by or in conjunction with the first, must be similar.

When a violin string is bowed, or a tuning fork struck, they produce a secondary vibration in an adjacent string or fork of similar medium. This new vibration is usually understood to be the same. If the mediums (the physical material) are identical then the vibration would be the same. But because of the diversity of this material world, to align an identical match of a creating vibration to the resultant creation is not usually a perfect match.

Because of this opportunity to create within the tolerances of similarity, we can see the creation of new forms of vibration being manifest materially. This is how we bring newness into reality, we align a creative vibrational base with a similar but different vibrational pattern and because the resultant sympathetic resonance of the two is harmonically supporting each other, the new vibration is created in a periodic cycle that remains in the space/time environment.

Another similar example would be the action of pendulums. If you have a series of connected pendulums then they will be influenced by one another and tend to swing in harmony. If you change how one pendulum swings, then over time they will all change and find a new equilibrium.

In forecasting the financial markets, there are many examples of sympathetic resonance of repeating cyclic vibrational patterns. The reason for geometric patterns forming in chart layouts of time and price is because the cyclic nature of energy in the market is aligning with prior energy patterns and when graphed over time, the repetitive patterns form a balanced and harmonic resonance with each other. This supporting of similar energy patterns allow a forecaster to predict the repetitive nature of the cycles when the original energy base is known. Future movement is always generated and supported from prior patterns.

Vibrate:

Pronunciation: 'vI-"brAt, especially British vI-'
Function: verb
Inflected Form(s): vi·brat·ed; vi·brat·ing
Etymology: Latin vibratus, past participle of vibrare to brandish, wave, rock -- more at WIPE
transitive verb
1 : to swing or move to and fro
2 : to emit with or as if with a vibratory motion
3 : to mark or measure by oscillation
4 : to set in vibration intransitive verb
1 a : to move to and fro or from side to side : OSCILLATE b : FLUCTUATE, VACILLATE <vibrate between two choices>
2 : to have an effect as or as if of vibration <music, when soft voices die, vibrates in the memory -- P. B. Shelley>
3 : to be in a state of vibration : QUIVER
4 : to respond sympathetically : THRILL <vibrate to the opportunity>
synonym see SWING

Oscillation:

Now that we are entering into the domain of the mind and we use it in fashioning the supports for our bridge, the stable belief structures from which we extend through the present moment into the future, or how the future extends through the present moment into the past. Either way is fine, all we need to be aware of is that the two ends are similar enough to support the movement.

This would be a good place to talk about the mind, before we get too much farther. It won't do a lot of good to know what to do if we can't do it. The mind is able to operate from its old ways very easily, but we want to change some things, and to add some things, so we need to "make" this change happen. It won't happen on its own. We must create the change and this will require discipline.

Discipline of the mind is easy when one has a plan. To try to discipline something without knowing what you are going to do, is the opposite of discipline, it is freedom and perhaps we could even call it chaos. How do I go about changing something that has been a part of my experience for a long time, how do I change a habit or perhaps we could just call it what it really is - a belief. There are many ways and we will talk about them, but first let's give our self some help, let's give our self a tool called disciple, and start doing it an easier way. Discipline is simply a plan that works and the willingness to do it; to engage in a process and see it to the end.

On the next page is a maze and it may or may not have a path that leads to the exit. One can try to find it by trial and error or one can use a simple plan and with discipline one can find out if it has a way out. Without a plan, we would likely be retracing routes several times just to be sure.

Here are a couple of plans, and you be thinking of how you could do it too. The first would be to put one of our hands on a wall and not take it off as we walk through the maze. If we continue to walk and keep our hand always on the wall, we will either find our way out or we will return to where we started. If we return to where we started, then it is a loop and we haven't found an exit.

If you did it, you will notice how our plan made the task very easy, if we were willing to have the discipline to do it. The mind is like a maze, in that it has many avenues to travel around on and at times we will become lost so to speak, and not be sure of how to find our way. But by using a simple method and having the discipline to do it, we can be assured of finding our way out of anything, yes I said anything.

Another thing about the mind is that it creates both what we want and what we don't want. A clear input into the minds creative system will yield a clear creation. We can be equally clear about what we want and what we don't want. This clarity is creative when put into a part of the mind that it resonates with. It will form the new energy patterns and we'll experience them in time/space. So be aware of what we are focusing on and not dwell on things we are trying to avoid, it will bring them to us.

When you try to avoid something you have to create it or you wouldn't have to avoid it. You have to see a snake on the path before you try to avoid it. The seeing of the snake or the creation of the snake takes place in the mind and because of the stimulus response of the eye to the light energy from the long form lying on the path, the brain forms a connection between that pattern to a previously recorded pattern that is called "a snake on a path". It is then "re-cognized" (thought again) and this new from on the path is called a snake on the path.

We called it a snake in the past and we are still calling it a snake, so the similar energy pattern we are seeing is interpreted as a snake and it is automatically connected to other patterns connected to the past snake pattern. Other patterns may be like "snakes bite, be careful" "snakes are dangerous, avoid them", "snakes can kill you". This combination and movement of patterns through our awareness is what we experience as perception. Our perception is what we call reality and it is labeled by the mind in this present moment as either:

1.) Ok ….or,
2.) Not Ok

"Ok" is peace, harmony, love, joy, clarity, empowerment, happiness and all positive (+) things in life. "Not Ok" is fear, confusion, anger, frustration, powerlessness, sadness and the negative (-) things in life. These patterns cause a response in the physical body and we call them E-motions (energy in motion). When the energy builds it is creative and we label it positive. When the energy diminishes it is destructive and we label it negative.

The human body builds with positive energy and diminishes with negative energy much like a wave on the ocean when two waves meet at the right time, they join to form a larger wave (two waves adding together are plus's: +, +, = 2+'s.) When two waves meet at opposite times so to speak, they diminish each other, they crash into each other and what is left is a smaller wave: (+, -, = ? less than). If the two waves are exact opposites, the same energy in the + as in the -, then when they meet, they disappear, they return to zero.

Another example could be to join two musical notes, and if they are the same, then they join to form a large one, if they are opposites then there will be dissonance and diminish the sound of music into static or noise, they will destroy the musical presence of the sound or the pattern and structure that we are calling music.

Criticize yourself and you diminish energy. Become afraid and you diminish the energy available to move in a positive direction. Get angry and that energy moves you in the opposite direction of what you see as positive. It is the opposite crashing wave and you are left in a lesser pattern than the one you wanted.

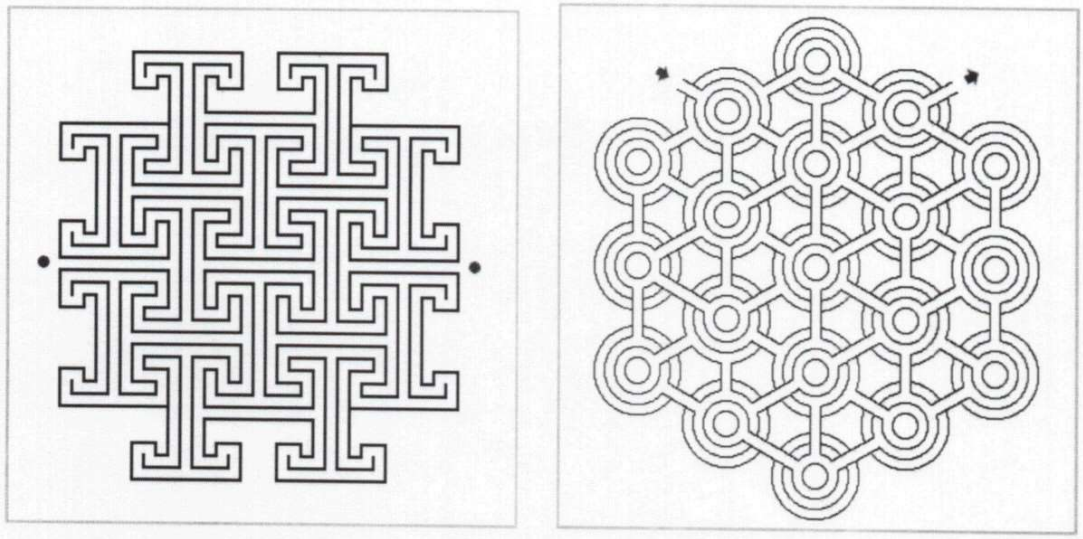

The mind can be like a maze or labyrinth, and if we haven't been paying attention to it for most of our lives, and most of us haven't, it has become full of pathways that are unfamiliar and we forget how to use them. We seem to get lost, confused and have a hard time getting what we want. Or it seems to take us forever to get where we want to go or to obtain what we want.

A maze is a problem to solve; a path must be discovered to get to the end we desire. This takes time and effort, usually having an emotional component to complicate the journey. A labyrinth isn't a problem, it usually has only one path, but it is a lengthy path and requires time. The reason we like labyrinths, is because we can pay attention to something besides our busy mind, it's a meditative journey of quieting the mind and it takes time.

Look at the figures below and ask yourself if you really want to spend the time to figure out all the old pathways in the mind so you won't get lost?

Labyrinth

Or do you just want to realize where you are right now and build a new path that suits your desire perfectly. The mind will do whatever we tell it to do, and if we insist on running the show with old tools we don't even remember we have, we will have a struggle in our creative endeavors. If we can learn a new way, a way that is particularly fashioned just for this desire, it will be a much more efficient and pleasant way to create.

The Law of Vibration is a simple law. It provides a framework to create in that doesn't require a lot of work or information; it only requires a similar vibrational pattern be aligned with a stable existing vibrational pattern anchored in the environment we want to experience.

Chapter 11

Speed in Vibrational Structures

Happiness is like a butterfly,
Which, when you pursue it
Is always beyond your grasp
But, which, when you sit down
May alight upon you

Nathaniel Hawthorne
1804 - 1864

Think of energy running in a geometrical pattern, and when it stays in the path of the pattern it retains all its energy, a free flowing channel that holds the energy. It could be like electricity flowing through a wire, a river flowing in a channel, a wind blowing down a canyon. When it stays in the wire, channel or canyon, it flows, when it gets out of the wire it shorts out, out of the channel it seeps into the ground or out of the canyon it becomes calm, it doesn't flow.

Now imagine this same geometrical pattern having another pattern overlaying it and it doesn't exactly fit. The different path doesn't align as the energy moves around the path and so it comes to a place where the energy must leave the channel and make its own path separate from the other one. This jumping out of the channel so to speak allows energy to dissipate, to be used up in the effort of circling an incomplete path. This will lead to forming another path or eventually canceling out the attempt to join.

Nature is very experienced in finding the most efficient route for energy to travel in. If it isn't able to find the effortless route it will inform the two non-matching patterns that something needs to adjust, by causing a dissonant vibration that matches neither of the two and this will start a movement back to homeostasis and efficiency. Nature will always resolve into balance and vibrational harmony. If it didn't, there would be no space and time as we know it, it would be chaos.

Here is a symbolic figure of a Desire and a Belief. The two patterns are not a match, though much of their shape is. The top line of the belief does not give a path for the top line of the desire to follow its pattern and so the belief is not supporting the desire. The result would be that something needs to change and if it isn't the belief, then the desire will not be sustained in the resident belief energy pattern. The desire has no place to cycle and remain in space/time.

Markets are similarly joining and separating as vibrational patterns match or don't match. This is evident as a trader joins in the markets activities. If the two form matching patterns, then the trader and market remain together and the trader is in sync with the market and remains joined. If there is a non-matching of vibrational energy patterns then the market soon resolves the disharmony by going one way and trader the other and the market takes the money and the trader takes the loss (the market is much larger than the trader and seldom does the trader have the clarity to change a market). This forcing of non-matching patterns is hard to continue because the trader can't afford it monetarily, or if he can then he can't afford it mentally (it isn't fun so why do I do it?). This is the way opposing structures resolve the mismatch of patterns and returns to efficiency.

Every vibration has a specific vibrational pattern and it also has a vibrational speed. This is apparent from what we see in a price/time chart of a market. The steeper the angle, either up or down, the greater the speed of movement or vibration. Time gives us a reference on the chart to observe the level of energy (vibration) that is actively moving the market. It appears on a 2D chart screen of price/time as it changes the pattern, but we must remember that the market isn't changing the nature of what it is (like changing from a rock to a tree) it is changing how fast or slow it is moving. Like a lion asleep on the ground looks different from one leaping through the air. It is the same lion, just moving at a different speed. It looks different, yet is the same.

Interacting with a sleeping lion is different than interacting with a leaping lion. For my vibrational pattern to match (to connect) with the pattern of the lion, my speed of vibration would have to move at the same rate or it couldn't match vibrational patterns defining the lion in that moment. If I were looking for the sleeping lion, I wouldn't see the leaping one until my energy level was willing to change. It may happen very quickly or perhaps not at all, but the awareness of the leaping lion would be at a faster speed of vibration.

The lion would move past me if I were in the lower sleeping state (maybe he would eat me, but that may make the example more difficult to understand, being in the lions stomach, not moving relative to the lion but with the lion…see what I mean?) But to just keep it simple, speed of vibration may not change the pattern of vibration but it could change its relative location or size. This difference would be confusing if one were looking for the lion in a regular size, location or more specifically – speed.

Looking at cycles of markets can be confusing if we are looking for a specific size, shape or speed. The market lies around at times and then gets up and leaps through the air. At these different energy levels it will appear differently on the screen. It is well to remember, that the market "is" one thing, but it "does" many things.

A person is a unique individual, identified by name, appearance, sound of voice, etc. Then that same person is seen in many places, doing many different things and at various speeds of doing it. Take a moment to see how you are inherently one being, yet you do many different things that would appear to someone else as not being you. Perhaps you even surprise yourself at times and hear yourself thinking: "What was that I was just doing? It wasn't like me at all".

Markets are like that too, they appear to us and we know who they are but they can also do things we do not recognize. We failed to see that particular pattern and how to connect with it. The vibrational pattern is the same but its speed can vary and thus it's representation on a 2D screen of price/time will not be familiar.

When we watch the lion long enough, we come to know how to recognize it when it is sleeping, leaping, stalking, walking, playing, doing all that a lion does and in each instance we can know how we want to interact with it. We also come to an awareness of when the lion usually does things. It sleeps after it eats, it stalks when it is hungry, and it leaps when dinner is near. It may walk for a long time to get water or to a better restaurant. It may do things at night is doesn't do in the day or things on rainy days it doesn't do on sunny days. It lives its life within the range of its vibrational pattern and this can appear to be diverse.

A lion can't be interacted with the same way a bunny rabbit would be or a snake compared to a worm. They have different patterns and we come to know how to successfully interact with that unique pattern through experience. When the vibrations aren't a match, the energy that brought the two together will dissipate and the two dissimilar patterns will either return to a more stable pattern (which was what it was before they came together) or the patterns could dissipate to a level where they can't exist as they were before. Like two crashing waves return to a smaller wave or a calm sea. The lion and rabbit returns to a fat lion and no rabbit. A market and trader that come together with dissimilar levels of energy or vibrational patterns will return to a market doing its thing and a poorer trader.

The market isn't going to change for the average trader, it's much larger and like the lion has its way over the smaller bunny. The trader must come to the market and connect with it where it is and know it at the place where trades can be followed as the price moves in time to the trader's and he profits from it. The market doesn't care who is following or not, who is the lion or the rabbit. But the law of vibration says that that which is similar will increase and that which is dissimilar will diminish. Getting in sync with the rise and fall of a wave will build you and the wave. Getting out of sync with the waves vibrational pattern, speed or cyclic motion will reduce the energy.

We could also compare this to math. When we bring together similar numbers we have more. When we bring together dissimilar numbers we have less. When we bring together positive whole numbers $1 + 1 = 2$, $2+ 4 = 6$, we have more. Bringing together positive whole numbers and negative whole numbers will give us something else; $1 + (-1) = 0$, $2 + (-4) = (-2)$, we have less of the original two.

Multiplying a whole number by another whole number will give us a larger number. Multiplying a fraction times a whole number will be less; $2 \times 4 = 8$ and $2 \times ¼ = ½$. We can see the same thing with subtraction and division or any other math operation. Try it! Any bringing together of dissimilar energies will diminish the pattern of our originals.

In each of these cases we had to know what would happen when we brought together dissimilar patterns or things. It will bring about an opposite effect from the matching patterns or things. Things of like nature, similar vibrational patterns, will join and build or increase. Things of unlike nature, different vibrational patterns will not join or build but result in a lessening of one or both or even its disappearance and a new pattern evolving or a void of patterns.

This is good to know as a trader. When he sees he is not making money and perhaps is losing money using the prior method that used to be profitable, then he must change to a pattern that will work now, or wait until the market returns to a form that will match the old one, or he returns to an old pattern that matches the present market.

Using a trading system that is not matching its energy level and pattern will result in a diminishing of the interaction, a reducing of energy (money). This non-matching could be the result of the trader's energy level changing and now not matching the market. It could be the markets energy level has changed and now it doesn't match the trader. This mismatch in energy level or speed changes the interaction point, where trader and market meet. It shifts the viewpoint or perspective of the trader and he will see things differently.

So if the trader is looking at the movement of the present market to determine where the market is going, then this awareness of his relativity to the market is paramount in knowing what is happening based on his prior experience with it. If it isn't similar to what he is familiar with, he has no valid way to assess what it will do next. However, if he is matching a similar pattern and knows where "he" is going then he can know where the similar pattern is going. He can know when to buy and when to sell and be profitable.

The other alternative is to create a platform of a vibrational pattern matrix that produces a profitable result. This second alternative of creating one's own result is much simpler once the knowledge of how this platform is accessed is understood. It comes from a position of inner focus rather then the outer. Seeing the lion or market outside of one's self as larger and stronger than us, will limit how we are able to interact with it. It has the focus of energy and it must be matched. When you are the focus of energy within your creative perspective, then you are the one with power and matching elements will join with you at your location and speed.

It isn't as hard as one might believe; we do it all the time. When we set out to do something, we are doing it from a creative functional platform and the result is guaranteed. When you have done something you find it easier to do again and again. You get up in the morning and you know you want a cup of coffee. You know you are going get a cup of coffee and so you get it. It is easy because you have no doubt, no reason or way to not get it.

The coffee doesn't have its way; it will come to you when you are clear and focusing with creative energy. If you aren't then the coffee is very clear what it will do, it will maintain its current energy pattern and move within it with ease. This may be to sit naturally in the bag of beans near the grinder. The movement out of the bag into the grinder is an energy that must come from something other than the coffee energy in the bag.

Now you get in the car and drive to work. You know you will get to work, even if the road is blocked you find another way to get there, or the car breaks down and you call a cab; there is no doubt or no way you are not going to get to work.

You have established a belief that you can have coffee in the morning and get to work on time and it happens every time (unless "you" decide you don't want to). There may be variations in the way it happens, but you find another way and you get there.

As soon as you have the desire for coffee or getting to work on time, you have a matching belief structure to use as a creative platform to launch the creation and realize the experience. The bringing together of matching vibrational patterns in a matrix of positive supporting energy with a desire that is vibrationally set to a matching pattern already in time and space will bring about its manifestation as reality.

When you as a trader establish a belief structure that you know you can trade successfully and profitably, and it is matched with the desire to do it, it happens. It may vary in its process but it happens as long as the creative platform (the belief structure) is matching the desire. The only way this won't bring about the desired result is if either the belief platform or the desire changes to a dissimilar pattern and they don't match and so can't create an additive effect. These two platforms are within, not external to the individual, and are controllable. External energy patterns like the lion or market may have more control if we are giving our attention (our focus, our power) to them.

Two waves that join must get larger; two waves that crash into each other must diminish and leave a smaller wave or waves. This is just how this Universe works and it works the same way with a trader trading the market. It has to be.

The speed of vibration can change the creative platform or the desire and can affect the matching or not matching of the two. What this speed of vibration is usually doing is changing the timing of the interaction.

You get up in the morning with a low energy, too much fun the night before. You are slow to get up, slow to get going and you may miss having your cup of coffee if time runs out because you have to leave for work to get there on time. If work is more important than coffee or being to work on time is more important than not being on time, you will not get your coffee this morning. You will not get it because your speed of vibration changed and didn't match that of the "sure way" of having coffee and going to work on time. The patterns were the same and matched but the speed of vibration of one or the other changed the match and it doesn't work now.

After experiencing "not getting coffee" for a few times, we may create an alternative creation process for having coffee even if we don't wake up with a matching speed of vibration in the belief structure and desire. We may find we want a plan "B" and it will give us what we want because it will match a new vibrational belief structure to our desire for coffee in the morning. So perhaps on low energy days where the speed of vibration is not matching my desire to make coffee in the morning before I go to work, I may call my secretary while I'm driving and have her get coffee for me when I arrive. We do this kind of adjusting all the time and we find ways to get our desires fulfilled, to get them to match our creative platform and speed of vibration and as such, we experience all our desires as fulfilled experiences. The only way it won't is if we change our desire (let the original desire cease to exist and go on to something else where we will use our creative energy).

The trader who is successfully matching the creative belief structure, speed of vibration (energy level) with a specific desire is experiencing the fulfilled result. It is also an adaptive process that will change when part of the process changes. If one morning, the trader's energy level is low it may be appropriate to switch to a Plan B. If the market is at a low energy level we may switch to Plan C, etc. It is the job of the trader to monitor the process of creative trading, to make sure all the parts are matching in vibrational patterns and speed and then he can be assured of the result he desires.

You create through your attention to your wanting…It isn't enough to know what you don't want; you must add to this what you do want. Knowing just "I don't want something…I don't want to be late for work, or to miss my cup of coffee" this does nothing to get you there or to bring it to you. The attention is still on the thing you don't want and so you are still experiencing the not having it. Until your attention is moved to something else, you won't have anything else. Our attention tells us what we have in this moment, it can be an idea, a physical experience of form or anything we can put our attention on.

Focusing attention is the process we use to create our experience. What we experience can be just the awareness of it, or we can interact with it by filtering it through a set of energy patterns called belief structures, and through this process we come to "know" on an internal level, what we are giving our attention to. It is by attaching the vibrational energy pattern we are giving attention to (desire or focus), to an internal resident vibrational energy pattern we are already holding in time and space and see it as our creation. We can then have it available to use in manifesting other creations by this new pattern becoming a resident energy pattern. As one creates more and more, this bank of resident energy patterns grow and our ability to match desire and belief is enhanced.

To change a vibrational pattern that isn't supporting a desire, you don't try to "think" what is wrong (thinking creates a new vibrational pattern). You first feel what is happening and if it doesn't match the desire (+) then you can think another thought closer to the vibrational pattern match (or don't think at all, clear the mind of the pattern that is not working and your basis for creating will improve, then let the new vibrational pattern come in).

It is your job to release your disallowing thoughts. Only you will be aware of what you are thinking, and if you are feeling confused, upset, uneasy, low or any kind of negative energy in what you are experiencing, then something needs to change. When you have released disallowing thoughts you feel better, you are moving back to a balanced and energetically strong position to create from.

The key to knowing if everything is working is of course if the results are obtained, one gets the realization of the desire manifesting in his experience. But because new creation showing up in the time/space environment takes time and requires an available space it may be awhile until the manifestation is complete. So another way to gauge how effectively the process is progressing is to monitor the energy level of the process; or more specifically, of the one who is providing the creative platform for the manifestation to occur in.

Measuring the conditions of the soil will help to determine how a seed is growing, particularly when it is very difficult to see the new plant before it breaks out of the ground. Digging up a seed to see how it is doing usually slows down its growth if not killing it out right. So a non-invasive technique, as to its progress, is to look at the environment and make sure it has all it needs to support the seeds growth; warmth, water, nutrients, etc.

The emotional state of an individual is the environment responsible for the manifestation of "desire" into physical form.. Emotions are energy in motion, and because they are expressed and felt physically in our body, we can know what type of energy we are growing our seeds in, what energy is present to support our desires in their journey into time/space form.

If one, who desires (creates), has a strong positive matching energy to the desire, it will signal the process is working fine and the manifestation is on its way to realization. A weak dissimilar energy is not going to create it, and we can know that if it isn't changed to an appropriate energy for growth, it will not grow, it will not manifest.

Our emotions are the measure of how effectively we are matching the vibrational speed and energy patterns in the creation process of our desires and our creative matrix of belief structures. When these two elements of creation are brought together in a matching environment we feel the positive energy of that strong, building force within our body. When we are building with dissimilar vibrational energy patterns it is a diminishing of energy, it feels less than, a negative feeling. We could say it doesn't feel good, it feels bad and in that awareness it is telling us we need to do something different or we aren't going to get what we want (desire).

There are many words we have fashioned to describe what feels bad and they all work, they limit our ability to manifest what we want. I feel bad, uncomfortable, irritable, afraid, anxious, fearful, awful, agitated, nervous, tense, uptight, disconnected, worried, uneasy, edgy, bothered, cross, worried, concerned, apprehensive, frightened, confused, puzzled, over-sensitive, alarmed, short-tempered, lost, hopeless, angry, disappointed, jealous, depressed, dissatisfied, irritated, lacking confidence, guilty, discouraged, timid, unworthy, pessimistic, powerless, hateful, overwhelmed, shameful, worthless, reprehensible, annoyed, hesitant….

Interesting how we could go on and on with these symbols we have created to contain this state of energy that is so opposite to what we desire. We surround our self with all these reminders of what we don't want. We should have a red flag immediately pop up in our mind when we hear one of these words. It's a clue we have taken the wrong turn somewhere and we need to get back on the right road, or we aren't going to get to where we want. We'll end up where this road will take us and it is not the peaceful, joyful place full of power and happiness we desire.

Think about the last word on the list above…hesitant. Here is an energy that we may be experiencing and including in our creative experience during the day. It's very clear it won't be a productive energy in our trading. Yet if we don't recognize what we are really using to trade with, this powerful energy we are connecting with to create movement and facilitate our desires, we will not get our desires fulfilled.

Energy will create, so it must be monitored and guided to combine in a natural matching sequence to bring about the result (desire). What do we do if we find our self in this negative energy pattern and know something needs to be changed? First a review of what we really desire should be looked at again, making sure it is still a valid desire and it is clear in the mind; then a refocusing of our belief structures that are a match to our desire.

If the desire is to create more profit in my trading experience and I am at the end of the month opening all my bills that I don't have enough money to pay them, I may be holding some negative energy structures about money at this time. The focus of the mind is on lack of money, not enough money, money is hard to get, and our mind is full of this negative polarizing energy. We could call it many names; worrisome, fearful, hopeless, frustrating, etc., but it all has the same effect.

This focus of negative polarizing energy will allow the mind to be holding a non-productive, non-creative energy platform for what is happening right now, and if I try to create in this energy it won't produce the results I want. There must be a shift from this set of dissimilar beliefs to ones that match the desire-- I want more profit, money; I have more profit, money.

You can tell when these dissimilar patterns aren't working, because you feel powerless, fearful, frustrated. Stop and clear the platform off, clean up the mind; maybe go for a walk in nature, listen to some music you enjoy, watch a funny movie, or talk to a good friend. Do something different to shift your emotional state to a more positive platform. When you feel better, then choose some of the matching beliefs you had in the beginning when you first had the good feeling that you are going to get your desire fulfilled.

Perhaps it was thoughts like: "I've made money many times and some of them were really easy, I can do that. I deserve to make money just like everyone else. Money is eager to come to me if I let it. I am happy when I have money and I want to be happy, so money comes to me and it makes me happy right now. Money is a really good friend to me and has given me many good experiences, I am ready for more right now. I am willing to receive lots of money from trading… when I follow my trading system money flows to me easily. I see that money is like air, very abundant, all around and all I have to do is breathe it in, to let it come in. It is here for me to use, it is good to use, it supports life, it enhances life, and it brings many joyful experiences. I love to trade and feel the thrill of making money, and feeling the positive wonderful energy I have when I trade. It is my natural state and it feels so good. My natural state is to receive and grow and enjoy life fully. It is good to know that I am a profitable trader and enjoy my self immensely by winning all the money I want."

If your trading experience hasn't been what you really want, then take the time now to write down what you want to experience and what you would have to believe to match that desire. Build a positive creating platform that will hold these desires. A negative platform can't do it. Desires can't connect and sustain themselves in this time/space environment without a matching resident energy pattern supported by a stable space/time energy frame. The cyclical nature of repeating matching vibrational patterns is how our desires are realized and experienced here. To see and feel it in form, it must be seated in form and that form remains as long as the cyclically balanced platform remains. Without this platform, there is no attendant energy expressing the creation into awareness.

It is like a window we look through, and when it is open to the particular view we like, we see it in our life experience. When the window is facing another direction, it has a different energy pattern that reveals something else. It can't show the thing we desire, it is not open to it, it is using the flow of energy in time/space at a speed and angular intersect that produces a specific result and it is not our desire. It must be focused like a telescope, microscope or camera to the image one wants to see or capture. You just can't look through it and see the polarizing energy and expect to see something specific unless you focus on the specific. Creation is a specific focusing of awareness. Creation in time/space is this focusing using an energy platform to support its result and sustain it in time and space, making it real and lasting as long as it is supported.

Resistive thought

The habit of resistive thought is the only way you can keep your self from a desire. What is meant by resistive thought is when we decide we want something (a desire), and at the same time we hold a thought that we don't want it. We are experiencing opposites and when we experience opposites we are feeling tension or the resistance to the flow of energy along a certain path.

Energy has a hard time going in two directions at the same time, just as we have a hard time thinking of two things at once or speaking to two different people at the same time, or doing any two things at the same time (sitting down and standing up, walking and standing still, buying and selling).

This is because we are experiencing the present moment as "one" thing. In order to go in two directions at the same time we must move from our present place of wholeness and go into something else, and this is usually what most of us call "confusion". It isn't real, it merely is an attempt to be somewhere we can't and the result is an uncomfortable emotion.

Just like an athlete becomes aware of ways to create certain sensory indicators, eye/hand coordination, and learns to use this to successfully get what he wants. A person can gain awareness of and control the sensory indicators of conscious creation. Emotions give feedback of matching or mismatching beliefs and desires.

Choosing a unique thought will always produce a unique emotional response. "Thought" creates emotion. Emotion is the result of combining a belief and a desire. When the belief and desire are different, when two things are vying for our attention, we move into the mixing bowl with these energies and feel the turbulent motion of these two trying to find a balanced stasis to exist in. This experience in the physical body is called emotion.

If I want to feel good – I need to choose a thought that feels good. The Law of Vibration cannot bring together two vibrations that are too far apart, they must match (like music, the notes only fit in certain ways or it makes noise (not music); we want music, we want our desire fulfilled, not our desire diminished.

You cannot instantly jump to a thought with a vibrational frequency very different from the thoughts you usually think. You cannot impose a new desire (thought) onto your creating platform of beliefs if the two are not of a similar nature (they need to be close to each others vibration (similar patterns), so they can join instead of clash.

You must be in vibrational harmony in order to let in what is wanted. Even though it is always present and available to come in, there must be a similar vibration for it to come into and join. Without this platform with an available matching pattern, the holding of the new pattern must be established on some available vibration that allows the new one to maintain its structure, and this is to resonate with a similar structure.

So if a similar structure is not present, then the building or bringing into awareness of this belief structure must occur. This requires the repeated acceptance of the new desire without any interference that would change its structure until it is stabilized as a belief within the creating platform of the mind. So it may take time to form a suitable creating platform belief that will support the new desire and enable it to exist in time (in a cyclical matching pattern).

You cannot hold a negative (-) energy pattern (belief) and create a positive (+) energy pattern (desire). Your current vibrational setting is determined by the vibrations you have been recently vibrating at. Like a standing wave is maintained by the formation of similar vibrational waves, your current vibrational standing wave is maintained by similar vibrations, and when you, or your surroundings or your desires change, then this standing vibrational wave must also change. If it doesn't, then you will leave your surroundings or let go of the desires that aren't matching. If you do remain in the vicinity of this different vibration, then it will be experienced as negative. It will not be additive but subtractive and this is always felt as some form of negative emotion or confusion.

If the change of the standing wave is accomplished, then the new standing wave will become additive and be experienced as positive. This is how at one time you can enjoy a certain type of music and at another time you don't. You can trade profitably at one time and not at another. The awareness of this vibrational standing wave and it's matching to what you desire, becomes the key to obtaining the realization of your desires.

You can't feel good about something and have it turn out bad. Attention to what you don't want will not allow what you do want. "I don't want to lose money" will not let money come.

There are only two kinds of emotion. One that feels good and one that doesn't feel good and the difference between the two is only a matter of degree. The more one is aligned with matching beliefs (vibrational standing waves) and desires, the better the emotional feeling. The more difference there is in matching beliefs and desires, the more negative the emotional feeling becomes. This disharmony is nature's way of reducing non-matching vibrations in an effort to return to a balanced stable Universe. Without this balance, chaos would soon destroy what effortlessly exists now.

Past - Future ….. Belief Structures

Desire, when viewed from past experience may create a definition that is based on resisted desire or unfilled desire. If ones past experience with manifesting desire has been haphazard at best, then the belief structure underlying ones method of realizing desire may be less than perfect. It may seem like it is true that only a small percentage of desires are actually fulfilled. This is believed to be true because the past experience has proven it.

When one uses the past to build a platform for creating, when one uses the past to determine what is true and what isn't, then the future is limited in that it must fit the past. It must match the past in order to be true and a desire must match a true belief in order to be materialized and sustained in time/space.

So this matching of desire to a true belief may be limited if all one is seeing as true is that which has been. Another possibility is that when one can see more than their past experience as being true, then the opportunity to create more than what has been in the past becomes possible.

We actually do this all the time, we believe many things we haven't personally experienced in the past. If we haven't been to Iceland we still believe it exists, if we see someone else do something we haven't done (climb the mountain), we can believe it is true for us too and we do it.

On the other hand, if we haven't done something and focus our attention on that, then we don't know we can. Our willingness to create a platform of a true belief isn't present, so we can't sustain the manifestation of "I want to climb the mountain" on the belief "I haven't climbed it yet". It doesn't match; it won't be a stable pattern for climbing mountains in reality. Once the pattern is securely set, when a matching belief is present to accommodate the desire (I want to climb the mountain) then it can occur.

What are some compatible belief structures that could get us closer to a sustainable platform that could create climbing the mountain? "I know other people have climbed it, I know I am as strong as some of these people who have climbed it, I know I can walk that far, I can walk up hill, I can do many things like it, I see no reason right now why I can't, I can do that, I can climb the mountain." These are energy patterns that will match climbing the mountain. Take some time and write some of your beliefs that will match climbing a mountain.

We can do this with any of our desires. This may seem like a simplistic idea, just think of how I can and I can. But it is just as simple to realize that if I am saying I can't, then I can't. Monitoring what I'm saying in the moment, what vibrational pattern is present will tell me what I will be creating. In the "I can't" vibration, I will be creating the opposite of what I desire, because the energy pattern of the "I can't" is negative. It is a pattern that is inverted and the only thing that can fit, that can match it is an inverted desire, an opposite desire.

When trading, if I notice I have a feeling of positive expectation, of comfortable ease in my trading, then I have a matching pattern, which could be "I know everything is fine, everything is moving in the right direction, it is ok for the price bars to move up and down because they do that and it is still trending in the direction I want it to, I am in a good trade and I am making money and I am willing to let time work for me and accumulate profit."

A feeling of unease, fear, doubt or concern would be an indication that the belief structure I'm creating from is not matching my desire, (to be profitable). I may hear beliefs in my mind saying "What if this is going to go the other way, I shouldn't have committed so early, I wonder if news will change the direction of the trend and I'll lose a lot of money, this could really change and I'll be wiped out, I'll lose everything".

This negative information forming my present creation platform of vibrational beliefs wouldn't sustain a profitable trade. I couldn't realize a profit. I can only create from the energy present in my current vibrational platform. I can only manifest a desire from the space/time energy I have right now on my vibrational platform. This matching of energy to create with is the basis of the Law of Vibration. It is the underlying foundation for the stability of this physical universe.

It is good to understand and know that when we are in agreement with its laws, we can know what the result will be. We can consciously create and experience a life of relaxed ease, when we follow the simple rules of matching an existing belief structure based energy, with a desire (an energy pattern we want to manifest into our physical experience.)

This physical environment is composed of stable, cyclic, vibrational energy patterns and to bring into this arena a new pattern, it must fit into the present matrix of vibrational form. As it fits it will become part of this cyclic patterning and we call it physical reality. Without this matching it cannot sustain its pattern in time/space and will not be in our physical reality.

We won't be able to experience it with our 5 bodily senses; we will only know it in our mind until it finds a suitable physically generated platform to move on. When it does, then we feel it, see it, hear it, smell it and taste it. Then we take it to our bank and deposit it into our account and see the real numbers appear on our statement. It must be stable to come and remain in this physical environment, it must agree with the Law of Vibration.

If you can clarify a desire, the Law of Vibration can bring it into being. The desire is the new energy pattern, the new creation. It is made in the desire and it is manifest with the matching belief in time/space. It isn't so important to know how it is going to work (manifest) for it may seem complex and an involved process. What is important is to become aligned with it, to match the vibrational energy pattern with the desire.

The stream of creative energy is always present and ready to create. The only reason you may not be utilizing this energy to manifest your desires into this time/space experience is because your present alignment to that flow is not matching. You can't utilize the flow, can't create. The reason one is not in alignment is that what is being held as the present resident energy pattern is being generated and sustained by a source different from this creative energy flow. It is being generated by a thought pattern (belief) acquired somewhere along the way in ones life that doesn't match.

As a geometrical example: if we were to say this creative energy flow is a sphere and the energy circles the outside of this sphere, like an electron around the nucleus of an atom, forming a shell that it moves in. If we were to say that this is how space/time can be created and that this flow of energy is a curvilinear path around and around. (We could use any 3D shape that had a cyclic dynamic of recurring paths, another common one is a torus. But for this example let's use the sphere.)

Now let's say that during ones life experience that person heard a concept like "you are weak and will never amount to anything". This thought form was just a passing energy pattern, like an arrow zipping by.

If it wasn't given any attention, it would go by and not remain in the person's experience. But if this thought form was heard over and over, the person would give more attention to it and it would begin to be attracted into the persons own energy pattern and perhaps find a place to attach.

Now we may ask, how can this happen, how can a thought form find its way into the person's awareness and then somehow find a place to find a permanent home of sorts? You get to choose what you believe and what you don't. Once you believe it, it gets to stay, it gets to become resident within your unique energy signature and it lives within you because you give it life, you let it live, it be-live because you believe it. Here is a graphic of how that would happen in a sphere, it would be attracted into the pattern and establish its place within the signature.

Here is one way to understand this, and there are many ways. It really doesn't matter which way you choose to believe how it can be, only that you believe it. Let's say you hear the concept as a young child "you are weak and will never amount to anything" and the first time you heard it, it didn't make any sense, you didn't understand what it meant. Not understanding it means you will not remember any meaning for it, even if you do remember the sounds; or if it were written, you could remember the letters and words.

The reason you could remember the sounds or letters and words would be because your brain made a synaptic loop of that particular vibrational pattern and when you saw it or hear it again your brain would match it to the one that is now there. There are no other loops connected to this new one, except proximity loops, those close to it in nature and similar vibrational patterns. So it may initially be around other new words and sounds but it has no additional thoughts or stories with it.

Then as this pattern is heard or seen again and again it may be experienced with other vibrations at the same time, perhaps it was cold that day, or someone else was near by, or you may have been sick and not feeling well and the uncomfortable feeling in the body may be included in the pattern. This may alter the paths leading to or away from the now resident concept ("you are weak and will never amount to anything").

As more experiences are added to it, the thought form builds around what this concept is connected to, and so the mind creates what it thinks about this concept. If it doesn't make any sense, the mind says it doesn't believe it, but if the mind includes nearby thought forms that it does believe, then the mind will start to believe it. If it finds the connection of the sick feelings of the body and the new thought form, then it may create a negative bias around it and the pattern becomes a resident negative belief.

The possibilities are endless, but it will create these thought forms and attach them to the loop system and now there begins to be what we call intelligence, or understanding. It is these vibrational patterns of cognitive creation that form words into sentences, into paragraphs, chapters, books, libraries, etc. Soon we find within these loops stories that have extensive meaning in a space/time framework, and because they are cyclical in loops, like our energy circling around a sphere, they remain available for future conception.

These intricate loops of connecting thought forms (vibrational patterns) woven into a complex web of matched moving energy, gives us our dynamic experience in life as a human sentient being. We are individualized and recognized as unique, because we all have created different combinations of these loops and we could call this uniqueness our individual energy or vibrational signature. No one else will have the same signature as you. And as a side note, no one else will look like you either, because the physical body is formed in agreement with the vibrational signature.

A simple example would be that most babies are generally quite similar, little turned up noses, curved up corners on their lips, soft smooth skin, etc. Then as we acquire personal preferences as beliefs, we then attach these to our energy signature and the body adapts to the added new energy forms. If the beliefs are positive, joyful, empowering beliefs, then the corners of the mouth remains curved up (like a smile), the skin remains flexible and smooth, and the nose has no need to change because the positive energy vibration of the baby remains.

But if the person starts believing other concepts different than the positive happy baby, the body will adapt. Like our example, "you are weak and will never amount to anything", would be a negative addition to the signature and the body would eventually show this addition with the corners of the mouth turning down, the skin may start to wrinkle from the stress of opposing energy structures (positive and negative) and the nose will begin to lose its uplifted baby nose.

So what does it matter if the nose or mouth is up of down? Well, because the body has to match the vibrational signature of the person, when it moves from the youthful childlike energy to a serious adult, it ages; it gets old and weak and will die. It is perhaps useful to watch what we are continually thinking, because it has more of an effect on our body than we may realize.

It may be helpful to reiterate the difference between linear and curvilinear energy paths. In this Universe there are no straight lines. This seems incorrect; because we think we are making them and seeing them all over the place. But this is not what we think it is.

Consider again that time and space is formed by movement from one point to another, and this would seem to be a straight line. We think this because all our science books seem to say this and we decided to believe it and so it is true for us when we "believe". When we talked about the arrow, zipping through our signature energy pattern, if it wasn't given attention it did not remain, but when it was given attention it came back over and over again.

The geometrical/geographical reason for this is fairly easy to see. A straight line goes by, and because there is no curve to deflect its course, it will continue to travel away from the person it just zipped by. Unless it changes course, it will never return, it can not be here again, and so it will not appear in our experience like all the other stuff that does remain here.

We get up in the morning and in our room we find the same walls, bed, window etc. These vibrational patterns are here every morning because they are in a cyclic loop, a curvilinear path that brings them around and around again, like the electron traveling around the shell of the atom. Anything that is not in a loop will not be here again; it is only here once as it is passing through.

This then gives us a very simple definition of life, living beings or living things. Life is movement in a recurring nature that can exist in time and space and as such must be in a loop or we could say must be curvilinear in nature. The zipping arrow of a thought form wanting to change its course into a curvilinear path with an existing living signature is in a sense wanting to be alive, to exist here and have an existence in time/space. Until this change from linear to curvilinear is made, it is not here in physical reality, it is only witnessed in the mind, not the body.

Every thought is a candidate for birth into this physical reality, but it must become resident within a live energy structure already here, it must move from linear to curvilinear and form a recurring loop. It must become a thought form you believe to be true for it to be in your Universe, and once there it will affect how energy is created into form. Depending on which loop you are presently giving attention to will determine what will be created. The energy of the present loop you are in is the creative platform in that moment and only matching patterns will be formed, and they will only be formed with that energy.

A simple way to know where you are at, is see what the body is doing. The body is a reflection of the current energy pattern that you are giving attention to. If the body is experiencing a negative energy pattern, fear, doubt, confusion, worry, anger, etc. then the current focus of the mind is holding a vibrational pattern of something that is negative, something against the natural positive structure you are. Knowing how you are feeling will give an immediate gauge of what kind of creating platform you are in. If it isn't what you want, then you know to change something or it isn't going to create what you want.

Nothing needs to change in the external world for you to be able to create what you want, what needs to change is the internal world, your present energy pattern, your belief loop. This current belief loop of vibrational energy must match what you want to create. This doesn't require a lot of time but it does require a moving toward the acceptance of the creative flow and the matching of desire to belief. This is the creative movement in time/space and it requires time and space.

Chapter 12

Streams of Vibration

Men are disturbed
Not by the things that happen
But by their opinion
Of the things that happen

Epictetus
55ad - 135ad

There must be movement to create space/time here. Movement is the indication that life is present and so when energy is organized into a repetitive, cyclical path that is connected to the present structure one calls reality, it is the manifestation of our space/time environment. Knowing how this process works, both in the external and in the inward nature of our self, will bring us to the place where we can have choice in creating what we desire in our life.

How do we organize desire (what I want) into these established flows of energy and participate in its effect? We will look at the transition of unmanifested energy into manifested form. Similar metaphors can be identified to represent this movement. A seed planted becomes a plant, generates flowers, that become fruit, and regenerates more seeds.

The drop of water falls into the ocean and becomes vapor forming a cloud, becoming rain that falls on the mountain, to become a stream, then a river and back into the ocean. A thought appears and is made into words that become sentences, and paragraphs, chapters, books and complete libraries. The flow of a PERT or CPM chart organizes the many events into chronological order and priority for the construction of a building or facility.

All things are vibration and have a natural flow of beginning to end, and our desires being of this energy vibration follow the same flow. Identifying what is in process and where in that flow it presently resides enables us to control an outcome. Being unaware of the process and not knowing leads us down the old familiar road without awareness and without an ability to determine our outcome, the realized desire. What do we look for? What is there to see? How do I connect to this underlying flow of energy and manifestation?

You can tell if something is harmonious because it will feel good, it feels enlivening, alive, not uncomfortable or disharmonious. This is a place you can create from; it will create "good" things, comfortable things, not the opposite. So bring new desires into this place in the mind and let them form there, attach and be sustained there.

If after you place a trade you start seeing all the reasons it won't work, then you have traded from a place in the mind that is still in fear or doubt. This old place of negative energy is not going to support your desire to be profitable. So create a system of trading where you can place the trade with stops (if it is not going to work), but be able to leave it and think of something positive again, something that you actually feel in the body as good and pleasant, alive and free. Not stress and worry underneath the positive thought you are trying to think, it must be real. (You feel it).

When you are sitting in front of a screen that has bars going up and down (which it has), the down movement in a long trade is against the desire of going up and it will take you into this negative place, into stress and it can't maintain your desire for winning, for profit. When you can trade in positive energy, you will win. When you love to trade it is fun, alive and ok. When you have to win it is pressure and it splits the energy into ok/not ok, (+/-).

When you watch your thoughts you have a choice of where you want to be in the mind. A thought comes in and is looking for a place to attach. If I give it my attention and play with it, I let it stay and it starts to attract other thoughts like it, or the vibrational patterns form a shape that is similar to the shapes that can be sustained. They become stronger and stronger the longer I stay there with my attention. If when the thought first comes, I don't give it any mind, attention, then it moves on by and doesn't attach (the arrow zips by). This is the power of choice I have in directing my life. I say what I want and pay attention to what I want to focus on. Learning to see the thoughts I am having is the key.

Triggers

Put your self in an environment that is positive. For me when I go on a hike I can write more clearly, see the things I may be stuck in, notice what my real desires are and how they are coming. Riding in a car for long periods of time alone, or running alone for a long time gives me a place to rest the old ideas and beliefs and let a new foundation be available long enough to clarify many things that wouldn't be clear in another platform.

When you notice you have moved away from the (+) platform for creating your desire, an easy reminder is to have written something down to remind you of it (your desire) or a physical reminder of it. Maybe something in your pocket or hanging on a wall near by that is positive. Think of the statue of "the thinker" by Rodin.

If you were to get into this pose you may think it is funny, silly, beautiful, contemplative, or??? In any event it has moved your attention in the mind from one place to another, and if it is more positive than before, then you can think more clearly, it is a positive energy pattern that can now be used for your desires.

Another common pose for the body we are all familiar with is when a person meditates. The person is sitting with the back straight, crossed legs, eyes closed and hands gently resting on the legs.

If you were to assume this position with the body, now where would the mind be? It could be positive or negative depending on what you believe about meditating. If it is a positive comfortable belief, then you would probably shift the mind into a calmer, more positive place. If you don't believe in meditating and it brings up uncomfortable thoughts then your mind may shift even further into the negative energy patterns.

Our bodies can trigger old places in the mind too; it can be useful in remembering positive places and experiences that will shift to that energy. It can and does quite often go to negative places and leaves one in the old familiar non-creative platform where desires are not realized.

Words can be triggers to align the mind with (+) or distract it into an opposite (-). Saying "everything is ok" may quiet the mind, put it back into (+) unless one has tried to use this so many times in the past when it didn't work (because it wasn't believed). Saying the words "everything is ok" may trigger the past memories of when it wasn't ok and so you end up in (-). Words are two edged swords; they have two sides that can be believed (+) and (-). The positive side feels good and is the energy that will create your desire. The negative side feels "not good", and it will not create your positive desires.

If you find yourself stuck in a (-) and the words aren't working, then you may be trying to jump too far in the mind. The pattern is too different; so take little steps. Allow your attention to go through several different little jumps, little spaces, and then it will be easier to change the (-) vibration you don't want. The path will lead you away from it, whereas, just one step is right next to the one you were just in and you still have access to the (-) one.

Here is a diagram representing the spatial proximity of a change in direction from (-) to (+) over a period of time. Example A is going from (-) to (+) in one step, it is a complete reversal in very little time and the proximity of the two is very close. It is easy to jump from one to the other, back and forth and this kind of vibrational change in space/time is not stable, it is not an event the body will experience as comfortable, it is not a settled, peaceful state; it's very unsettled. The natural direction of this time/space reality is to match vibrations and come to a balanced and stable position. This is the state of material form in this physical reality, and when it becomes unstable it disappears.

So our attempt to jump from one state (-) to its opposite (+) is not going to find a place to be in our reality, it is going to be so unstable and trying to balance itself that it will not remain. It will usually revert back to what was previously stable, to the nearest anchoring vibration which in this case is the (-) one we are trying to jump away from.

A more fruitful way to accomplish this is to take smaller jumps to similar but more positive vibrations until the desired (+) one is reached. In Example B (above) the first steps we take from our (-) vibration is still negative but a little change toward the (+). Then a little more and a little more until eventually it gets us going in the right direction (+) and these little steps are going to be able to remain in reality, they will be supported by the previous vibration in the time line.

Using this gradual, stepped approach to changing your energy platform is very predictable. It will work. Once you have changed to a (+) platform it is helpful to have a reminder of where you want to go now. You have just been paying attention to a process that may not be related to what you desired earlier, your reason for deliberately trying to improve your energy field so you could get that desire fulfilled. Now you have the power (+) to go there, make sure you don't get distracted down another path. There are many vibrations waiting to have your attention so they will be manifest, you need to pay attention to what you want.

In the real world you probably won't have a perfect gradual turn from negative to positive but it would have zigs and zags, trying to change and failing but trying again. It may look something like this:

Does this look familiar? Maybe how the market looks? The above figure is a representation of trying to change the mind from negative to positive by making gradual shifts in energy. The market is doing exactly the same thing, in fact everything that moves is doing the same thing, making gradual shifts in energy from (-) to (+) or if the energy has been positive it can shift to the negative. His is how life in any form moves, and the market is a living entity in the sense that it is making the same kind of movement, it's only disadvantage is that the material form it is moving are pixels on a screen or lines drawn on a chart paper. It isn't as dynamic and conscious as we are. Some life forms seem far from conscious to us (I mean what does a germ know? - yet some do pretty well in defending themselves from full scale attacks from the top echelons of the human race.)

But this book isn't about seeing a market as alive or not, it is about recognizing how the market relates to the Law of Vibration and all we need to see here is that it's path is very similar to the path we are taking inside our own heads, the path we are taking in our mind when we are thinking and moving from one polarized energy to another. By seeing this similarity we can begin to understand what it is doing or what it is going to do, when we understand our own movement, our own relationship to polarized energy moving in a matrix of supportive flexible form, in a medium of time/space.

Here are some charts of a market represented in bars, candles, and line on close.

Can you see what is happening here, what the chart may be saying that we never considered before? Take a look, and let this new possibility tell you of a way of knowing the market, its foundational underpinnings, its method of change, movement, balance, harmonized polarity. Ever wonder why gaps in a chart are almost always filled in some markets and maybe less in others. That markets seem to have personalities or certain tendencies that seem to repeat regularly?

This isn't a random thing happening, it is very predictable when the underlying energy is known and observed. Seeing what is happening in our self, understanding how we make these shifts in our movement, will give us the template to see it in everything else, for it is the same law. Here we are calling it the Law of Vibration. Get to know it, it is who you are. It is a way to see something that may have eluded you for a long time in trying to understand how to know where a market is going and how to make money in it.

Now, may be a good time to return to how to do this. This can be very simple unless we want to make it complex and entertaining. If we are used to being occupied and busy in our mind then our base for seeing this, our creative platform will use a complex energy vibration and it will appear as this energy, it will be complex. This is ok, everything is ok, just some things are easier, quicker, smoother, etc in a simple way as opposed to the busy complex one. You choose, get in the frame of mind you feel comfortable in, or create a comfortable one if you haven't yet, and start enjoying life in a new way, it is your choice.

We are creating with energy, desire is what we want and beliefs are what we use to form it here in space/time. Our first job is to start being familiar with what our mind is doing with these things called desires and beliefs. Then fashion a plan to realize, materialize, form in space/time this thing we call the future, this thing we call our life. Pay attention, give attention; watch where you are focusing this attention, this energy, this creative glue we stick everything together with.

Writing the desire down is helpful; and then looking at it when you get to the good mood, the positive creating place in your energy field. Having a trigger near by that brings you back, a picture on your desk or wall, a string around your finger, a note on your shirt sleeve or written on your hand, a rock in your pocket, something real in your present space that reminds you of that desire will be the key to continuing in this positive direction, this creative direction. Then keeping the mind (attention, focus) in a positive frame (creative platform for sustaining a created desire) will allow it (new form in time/space) to exist, to remain.

When you are trying to move to a (+) place from a (-) one, when your focus on a (+) one stays here long enough to gather other (+) thoughts, then the foundation you are standing on becomes strong enough to hold the new desire. Things have mass here in time and space; they have weight and must be supported with a comparable mass structure. The new desire (thought) must be supported by a matching belief structure capable of holding it in time/space so that it can remain here. If the beliefs are weak and flimsy, it will break through and fall out of this real place, this material place of balanced mass and energy. It will fall back into just energy.

If you are walking in a forest and you come to a stream and smell a beautiful old fragrance that reminds you of a good experience in the past of flowers associated with beauty, gratefulness, and the wonderful magnificence of life, then you remember when you gave flowers to your sweetheart and that began a wonderful relationship that turned into the love of your life and it is still vibrant and full of joy now. These thoughts are leading you into a very helpful energy platform for creating what you love in your life.

If on the other hand, the flowers you smelled by the stream brought up a memory of the funeral of your close friend and this made you remember how bad you felt that you hadn't seen this friend before he died, and it made you remember when your grandparent died, and all the sudden you are not in the beautiful meadow of a forest smelling a fragrant flower by a stream, but are in the middle of your mind where funerals, death and regret are located. You cannot create what you love from here, you will only create with the material that is present and supportive of similar vibrations. These dark patterns can't support light ones. These linear patterns can't support curvilinear patterns. Becoming aware of watching where the mind is and where it is going, is the key to successful creation of desire into reality.

Another possibility is that when you smell the flowers you become aware of another external vibration. This is different than going inside to find another thought; it is present in the real world and wants to connect within your creating platform to become real within you. By giving it attention and allowing it time and space within your energy field, you create it internally.

Let's say you smell the flower and so far it is a good experience (+). Then a fly buzzes by or you notice you have been standing in the sun and it is very hot. If you pay attention to either of these, you shift to another part of the mind, a different synaptic loop is entered and this opens the gates to many other pathways within the mind. You have to be on one path at a time, so you must traverse this labyrinth, going through one gate at a time and along one path at a time. So when you shift to another thought, you have left the one you were just on. If you don't come back you cannot create with that kind of energy. You are now creating with the energy of the present path (the present platform of vibrational creative energy).

So you need to walk on and get away from the flies or out of the hot sun and then focus on a (+) energy again. These external energy forms are very stable and strong because they are already here, established within the framework of the material world. These vibrational energy forms can be very distracting when one isn't paying close attention to the fact that obtaining a desire is more than just hoping for it with lip service. It is a conscious and deliberate focusing of attention and maintaining the proper energy field to manifest from.

This desire you are trying to bring into material space/time is not as strong and balanced as the flies or hot sunshine. This new platform for the desire is still under construction and the irritating fly's platform is very strong and has been shored up over many years of use. The same thing happens if you believe hot sunshine can be annoying; this is a very believable creation. So you need to walk away from these strong detractors, those physically in the world and mentally in your mind. They will win the battle for attention if given equal opportunity. This journey of making sure you are heading toward (+) is the way to create (+).

In a trade, where thoughts can jump into your mind (awareness) from internal beliefs that are still being realized as true and from external sources, like a fly landing on your arm, a chair that is uncomfortable, a room that is too hot or too noisy. Any of these sources of distracting energies can be given attention and lead one from the focus of trading in a (+) winning, profitable energy. Your job in the trading process is to give attention to making money, being profitable, winning; and these require a matching (+) energy, not a fly, chair, hot or noisy room. You must learn to focus to keep the mind from going away. You also need to get to another external place or get that material distraction out of the one you are in.

Have another place to go to when you notice you're in (-). Swatting the fly away may work temporally but you need to get away from the fly. The fly wants to land on you. So by staying near it, you will continually be swatting it away, not giving all the attention to what you want, but some attention is to what you don't want (the fly) and this is a focus on (-) energy. You are diminishing your resource of positive creative energy in that moment and you can't be as effective in positive creation.

Positive energy is effortless, but you need to move to where it is, both internally and externally. The trail in the forest is beautiful, but when you stop moving, you may not continue to pay attention to where you are, because the external newness you have been experiencing (moving) stops and you become familiar with this place and so the mind starts moving within the many thought forms it has access to. If it meanders into a (-) then you have left the forest (+) and need to come back to it. Start walking again, or connect with the stuff that is already there in the (+), and keep the focus within this (+) creative energy.

So the fly lands, swat it off but keep walking and enjoy the rest of the path, the (+) path. All of life is (+), it is what I think about this (+) life that makes it seem (-). It is my argument with it (+), my judgment of it (+) as being not ok that creates this (-) thought energy. It is the creation process of awareness of reality (+) and judgment of reality (-) that makes the duality of our experience (+/-). Creation is not from duality (+/-) it is from wholeness, one, (+) or (-).

Because we are in time/space we can look both forward and backwards. We have choice and this choice is (+,-) it is movement, it is space/time choice, it is space/time. In space/time there are always two things (+ and -), it's ok, and it's not ok, I'm winning, I'm not winning. When we get into a (+) thought we usually don't try to go to the (-), (though we sometimes do). But when we are in a (-) thought we do want to go to the (+) one.

Knowing that there is always a (+) one to every (-) one we are in, we always have another thought available to give our attention to, to focus on. It can be this easy. Once I realize, I am the one with choice and I am aware of what I am thinking I can "consciously create", I can choose and realize my desire and physical experience. Without this awareness there is no choice, I am left to what just comes into my mind and it is usually similar to the experience I am in, where I am at. Thoughts generate matching thoughts, similar vibrations support similar vibrations.

To go to a new place requires a new vibrational pattern and so a conscious choice will take us there. It is easy to find the one we want when we are in a (-) vibration because it is the opposite vibration we want. Seeing these vibrations and understanding their opposites give us the clear path we want to walk in, we want to think in. If one can see in awareness the (+) or (-) path we are experiencing, can feel the path we are on (+,-), then we can have choice, we can guide our experience to where we desire, where we want to go (+).

"Writers block" is when a person is in a (-) energy, not allowing matching thoughts to come and go along with the story. "Traders Block" (if we can call it that) is to remain in a (-) vibration platform that doesn't support and match winning, profitable desires.

After you have been hiking on the beautiful mountain trail, the thought may come by saying "I have been hiking so long I must be getting tired". "I am tired and thirsty", "I need a drink of water". Then one realizes that all of the sudden the body is tired and thirsty and it will no longer hike with ease, but it is harder now. It is no longer as fun, it is beginning to be work. If these thoughts had come in and passed on through, if I wouldn't have paid attention to them, I wouldn't be tired and thirsty, I would be enjoying the beauty of the experience.

I have been a runner for many years and enjoy competing in races. I have run races from one mile in length to a marathon (26.2 miles). What I find interesting is that no matter how long the race is, when I get to where I am coming to the end of the race my mind starts attaching to some thoughts. If I start thinking "man I'm tired, just a little more and I'll have relief" (which means I'm not in relief yet, I am hurting), I start experiencing feelings of physical pain, nausea, stiff tight muscles.

The funny thing is though, it happens at the end of a mile or a 5K, 10K, ½ marathon or marathon. But when I get to the end of the mile in a 5k, 10K, ½ marathon or marathon it isn't the same experience. You could say, well but you didn't run as hard that first mile or 5K in the marathon as you did that first mile in the mile or 5K race.

But my fastest time for a 10K was in a ½ marathon race and it was by a large margin too. Other 10K's felt harder, my mind thought a 10K is hard so I felt it. In the ½ marathon my mind was waiting for the end to get to the thoughts of tired and so I was free to cruise effortlessly through the first 10K of the ½ marathon without the hindrance of a (-) vibration platform to create my run from. The reason we get tired is because the mind creates tired. The reason we have limits is because of the limits we set in the mind. The person, who finds someone stuck under a car in an accident, lifts the car off the person before they remember they can't.

Almost every new trader makes money in the beginning. They don't know they can't yet, but this information can start to build as soon as a few trades are losers, (of course this is part of the business, winners-losers) but to the new trader, this can be fashioned into any number of polarity frames: (+) or (-), symbolic opposites, opposing extensions through time/space, differing paths, etc.

If it is entertained in a diverse energetic mind, the outcome will be a diverse energetic result, the trader will win and lose when the mind starts its unbridled journey through energy forms (external and internal) and in this movement, past grooves cut from early childhood will be waiting for the wayward energy to come join in the journey of fear and greed, panic and gluttony, terror and insatiability, too little and too much. Without knowing there are potholes in the road, we will keep hitting them, and it isn't good for the car, it will eventually break something, and in the case of the trader it will eventually break his bank account.

The wise trader (creator) will shape the journey of the mind into a (+) path. A (+) path can allow for the (+) and (-), the movement of up and down in the normal daily exchange of energy in the market, the breathing in and out, the moving and resting, the beating heart beat that must move in two directions to function properly. Allowing energy to flow is how things move, and knowing that energy comes from a source and is like that source is ones key to being in charge. To create what one wants and to see how everything is created and how it exists in time/space.

I will tell you the reason I have been using an example of hiking on a trail in the mountains. Right now I am hiking in the mountains, taking notes on the things I have been writing about here in this chapter. I am on a beautiful mountain trail because I live in this kind of environment. It lets me be in a very positive energy to put ideas together in a way that I enjoy and hopefully in a way that you can too. It is fun to be positive, to be in a positive energy that resonates with the natural vibration of the physical body. It feels good.

I just realized how subtle our thoughts are and how they allow the (-) to creep in almost unnoticed. One way is humor, a joke. I am sitting on this rock overlooking this beautiful green meadow, a gentle little stream next to me, the majestic mountain peaks in the clear blue sky, when a man and woman came up the trail and walked by me. I said hi and in a while I started up the trail again and caught up with them. I noticed the man was walking quite a ways in front of the woman, and so when I passed her I made a joke. I told her "I'd throw a rock at him if he left me behind", thinking that couples should be walking together on hikes. She smiled and I continued up the trail.

When I passed him, (yes I am competitive, no one passes me on a trail, <grin>) I felt a little uncomfortable, thinking he wasn't very nice to her, leaving her way back there, alone and unprotected. I politely said hi, not really connecting with him and continued up the trail. Then I started to realize how I had filtered him through my mind, seeing him through the thoughts I was thinking and making him into some guy that didn't care about his companion on the trail. I was experiencing my attention to my thoughts and not about what was really happening on the trail. I sat down on another rock to make some notes and as he passed I saw a different man. I saw a man hiking quite innocently on a trail the same way I was, alone.

I said hi a little differently this time, I looked into his eyes and said I like you, you are just like me, and I like myself when I see you this way. When I looked at him before and didn't like what I saw, I was really seeing myself and not knowing it, but feeling it. What I think becomes what I feel; it becomes "my" experience and has nothing to do with the other person's experience.

Then I start seeing another possibility, maybe she told him to go ahead, maybe they wanted to experience the beauty as I wanted to (alone), maybe this scene was absolutely perfect and it is my thinking that is way off here. I can only know what I think happened here, I can't know what really happened with them because I wasn't there, I was on a rock and then more correctly still, I was in my head. What is in my head doesn't match what is somewhere else; it can only match what is from the past from my memory and rarely is it the same as what is happening now.

This joking about something can be a hidden diversion from our desire. We laugh off the surprise, the energy that was built up and released as a laugh is usually an opposite thought. We laugh because we don't expect what happens, it is a surprise to us, and it is the opposite of what we expected. Is something familiar here? Why are we playing in an opposite? We know that opposites aren't what we really want; we want the matching desire (positive).

Yet we literally play around in our joking experience not knowing the fun we think we are experiencing is really relief, it is a release of tension in the physical body because the mind is holding a positive and negative. It is holding opposing energy forms and the vibration is felt physically and released through laughter. (I'm not saying don't laugh, laughter can be very therapeutic in a sense if energy is built up and released, like flushing a system with a powerful stream of water, it has a cleansing effect, just be sure you release it. Don't leave the pressure in the system.) Another name for positive and negative energy trying to hold the same time/space is stress.

I mentioned I am a runner and like to compete in races. Most races are about winning. The focus is on the end and if I win all is ok, and if I don't it isn't. So the whole race can depend on the outcome. I may have a hard time arranging it, depends on how I fit in my creation platform. If I focus on the end and have thoughts along the way, "I'm behind, they are faster, stronger, it's not my day, I wished I would have trained harder" then these are going to make it harder to have a (+) at the end because I've run the race in the (-).

Trading with the same focus on the end while holding a (-) belief platform along the way will make it hard to end in the (+). The end of the race, my desire, is being created as I run it, it is being created from my present vibrational energy and if my mind is focused on (-) during this creation time, using (-) to build it with, it will be (-). (Like attracts like).

When I'm running a (+) race, I feel confident, at ease, enjoying the path and knowing the outcome is ok (+). It doesn't mean that along the way I didn't have the opportunity to go to a (-) place. That possibility is always present and it is my job to guide my desire along its path in time/space.

Along the race course I could focus on other runners running in pain, exhausted, hurting, perhaps bent over with cramps or throwing up. If I connect with these, either for myself that I have been there done that, or if I connect with the person doing it, feeling sorry for them or wanting to help them, or even being glad they are doing it so I can win more easily. I am focusing on a (-) vibration and depending on how long and how thoroughly I enter it, will determine my present energy platform that I am running my race in.

It can be a subtle shift from ok to not ok and I did it by paying attention to a (-) structure and seeing it as true, believing it. Another example is when I observe who is holding a lot of responsibility beliefs of taking care of someone or something. The thoughts about something other than our self can shift one's vibrational platform very quickly.

An example I'll use is what a woman, who is very sensitive to and concerned about animals, experienced one day. Driving along a highway she suddenly came upon a commercial milk producing facility. It wasn't the quaint down on the farm type of scene with cows grazing in green fields, a cute farm cottage and old red barn. It was a stark scene of many fences filled with many black and white cows close together laying around on the ground with no green anywhere or standing along feed troughs filled with a mix of whatever you give to a cow to get the most milk.

Along side this vast array of fences and cows were a couple of plain large buildings, filled with cows waiting in line to be milked by an automated milking machine. When I first saw it, I didn't think too much about it, but when the woman saw it, she immediately let out this gasp and closed her eyes as she turned away. The "thought" this isn't ok (-) was so fully embraced, so completely given full attention to that it shifted the physical body into a radical jolt, shock and literally moved her in reaction to the opposing energy patterns. She was previously (+) sitting there in ease and then shifting to (-) moving to turn away, closing her eyes covering them with her hands and even letting a gasp of air suddenly come out. The (-) thought structure was very powerful; it had enjoyed a long existence within her of believing animals can be hurt by humans.

I asked what she was seeing, and she told me that her first thought was how sad for the poor cows, they should be in a green field filled with grass and flowers, etc. They are suffering in the heat and dry dusty dirt and that their whole life is probably ruined because someone wants to make money and doesn't care about the cows feelings.

I could envision what she was saying, and I could go there and believe it too, but I knew it would only be creating in my experience what I was not wishing for the cows. In that moment of believing the cows are suffering and not enjoying life, I would be suffering and not enjoying life. My body would shift in space/time and try to balance the opposing (+) and (-) energy I was holding as true, as a creation platform.

On another trip through the same area, we approached the place where the milking facility was located. This time she decided not to have the previous experience again, realizing that the first one had made her feel horrible for quite some time. She realized that it was the thought about the cows not being ok that was the problem, it wasn't the scene. So this time as the same scene came and went, she didn't have a reaction to it. She didn't entertain the (-) thoughts she had before and so this time it was a much more peaceful experience.

She saw that everyone that drove by would have their own thoughts about what they thought about it, and each would have their own physical and emotional response to that thought. Those who let the cows be ok in their mind would experience them self as ok, and those who found it not to be ok, would experience themselves as not ok. We create our experience by what we are thinking and if the experience isn't what we really want; then we must change our thinking.

Trading is about what we think during the time of entering and exiting the trade and when this time between enter/exit is a (+) creative thought pattern, we enable the creation to be what we want (+). When we spend this time in a (-), we enable the creation to be what we don't want. The process of setting the right personal platform to trade from is in our control. The market is moving in its perfection and it isn't the easiest thing to change so that it will go along with our desire. We are the thing that is easiest to change to go along with our desire and realize its creation.

We have choice in what creation platform we want to create from. When we are in sync with (+) creative energy it will manifest, it is the law, it will happen. So what we need to do is be clear what our desire is and build it from a strong, powerful place so it will be sustained and remain in our experience in a strong and powerful place as long as we want it.

Remember the story of the three pigs? It is important what we use to build our dreams from, it will have an effect in how we live in them and how they remain through this time/space stuff. The first pig built his house out of straw, the second out of wood and third out of brick. We all know the story so what do we want to build from. What is important to us, what we are going to desire and how are we going to focus on its creation? We must build it to make it last, make it strong and beautiful and exactly as we want.

What kind of trading experience do I desire? Is it profitable, comfortable, enjoyable, exciting and fun, full of life and positive experiences? Or do I find myself not enjoying it, afraid at times, frustrated, tight, stressed, uncomfortable and losing money? Is there more understanding now of what I may be doing right or wrong that affects this experience I'm in? Do I want to do something different, something in line with my natural self, my positive, powerful creative self? I get exactly what I want. Am I willing to see clearly what I want?

If I have been lost in the past, not knowing what I could do differently to have what I want, is it more clear now? When I was in fear did I notice it didn't work? Fear and greed have been talked about for centuries as the nemesis for being successful in trading. What are they talking about, how can I not do this and find the success I am looking for?

Fear is pretty easy for most of to see that it will contract us into not being able to act, not responding efficiently to the market. It's recognized as a negative energy, though sometimes we say it is a good thing because it keeps us from jumping off cliffs. Well it is good to not jump off a cliff if it is going to kill you, but jumping is not the problem it is hitting the bottom too hard. Jumping with a parachute or a bungee cord can be quite an exciting adventure. But most of our fears are unwarranted, yet they contract our actions and impede our reactions to real life situations, especially situations in trading.

So fear is a negative but why is greed a negative? Isn't it about getting more, gathering in lots of the stuff we are trying to get. Yes, but it's "too much"; it is past what is positive and into something else (the only other thing is negative). Because it isn't positive it is negative. There are only two things available in this polarized energy field, this Universe of space/time, (+) and (-). So when we leave the just right, we end up in the just wrong, we end in a negative vibration, opposing what we desire and not allowing the creation of it. Greed is a negative energy platform that will reduce what we desire just as efficiently as fear will reduce it. It's a given in the Law of Vibration.

A strong vibrational pattern will draw to it other similar ones. It's like you have a "choice net". A net you hold up to catch patterns in. The net is a pattern and energy patterns matching it will get caught in it and other energy patterns not like it will pass through.

You have a choice in which net you want to hold up. Choosing a positive pattern net will catch positive energy patterns. Like catching butterflies, but you don't want to catch the mosquitoes, so you use a net the mosquitoes pass through. You are always holding some kind of net, some energy pattern in your creative platform, because you are always drawing in energy and selecting the kind you are focusing on.

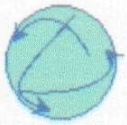

Choose the right net or you end up with mosquitoes instead of butterflies. Finding a trading pattern that works is the same analogy. You focus on a pattern that creates a positive result and every time you use it, it will give the same result. Use a different one and you get a different result.

Pay attention to "what you want" as opposed to "what you do not want".

Trading example:
1.) "I want to be profitable"
2.) "I don't want to lose money".

These are two very different vibrational patterns.

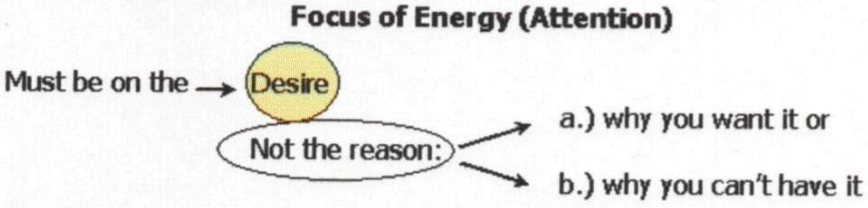

1.) "I want to be profitable" may look like this:

2.) "I don't want to lose money" may look like this:

The first pattern is a positive, natural pattern and is easy to match to similar positive patterns; in this case they would be circular and have cyclic flow in a counter-clockwise direction. The second pattern is a negative irregular shape with random flow and would not match with the regular circle pattern and flow of the positive first one. It would however match other similar irregular shaped random flow patterns. This is why it is important to match vibrational beliefs with similar matching vibrational desires. When they are dissimilar, they will not enhance, but diminish each other.

These are three very different vibrations:

1.) the desire you want
2.) "why" you want it and
3.) "why" you can't have it

Vibration #1 "I desire a yellow and gray circle with blue lines" may look like this:

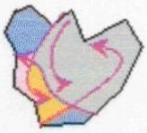

Vibration #2 "why" I want the yellow and gray circle with blue lines" may look like this:

Even though this is very similar and will enable the creation process, it is not the best match; it is a match of 1.) "What" you want and 2.) "Why" you want it, and they are two different vibrations. The closer the match, the quicker it will manifest.

Vibration #3 "Why" I can't have it may look like this:

This vibrational pattern is very different and will not enable a creation of the original desire at all. It will not create into form or "time/space".

Focusing on the 'Why" or reason you want it or anything that is different than the clear focused desire, will slow down the creation of the desire. Pay attention to what you want to create, not why or when or anything other than the clear focused desire. These other vibrations though they may be similar are not the most efficient means of manifesting.

Everyone has the ability to put their attention anywhere they want. So everyone has the ability to change their present situation, feeling or mood, by changing their attention to something else. There is one caveat; you can't easily jump from something very bad to something very good. The transition from vibrational patterns must occur in agreement with the Law of Vibration; this law says that new creations
