come from matching present energy patterns and if one is a negative pattern, it can't create a positive one.

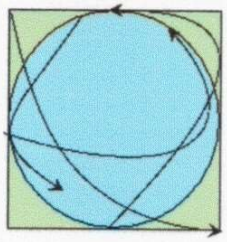

Well now, what do we do then? It isn't impossible to change, it just has to abide the rules of change, and the rules are saying we need to match to a similar pattern. The way we can do it, is to let go of the negative pattern completely and give attention to a positive one, this is possible, but some negative patterns have a lot of energy and if it is a familiar pattern that has been given a lot of attention in the past, it has made a deep groove so to speak in the mind and ones attention can easily slip back in if we are not securely into another one.

You know if you made it or not by the way the body is reflecting the new or old energy pattern. If one made it to another pattern, the body will reflect this new positive energy and you will feel positive, good, empowered etc. But if you fell back into the old negative rut, the body will still reflect the negative and you won't feel good, you will still feel negative.

There is another option, other that trying to jump out of the rut into a whole new pattern and that is to gradually move yourself from the unwanted pattern to a similar but less unwanted pattern, then to another better one but still not the best, and gradually you can move into the one you want.

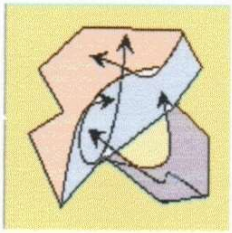

Say we are in this pattern: "I can't climb the mountain" and our desire is "I want to climb the mountain". Let's use this geometric symbol as the pattern:

"I want to climb the mountain":

Ands let say this symbol is the vibrational pattern for:

"I can't climb the mountain":

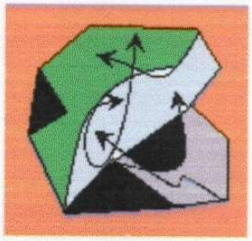

As we can see, these are two very different patterns and they have no apparent similarity or matching qualities. To jump from one to the other, would require a letting go of the one completely and allowing a new platform to generate a more compatible match. As we said above, this isn't always as easy as it seems. It usually takes time and a willingness to focus with conscious direction. Many are too lazy to direct the mind, or just haven't realized that possibility. Many are content to settle for what is happening and not clearly choosing another path.

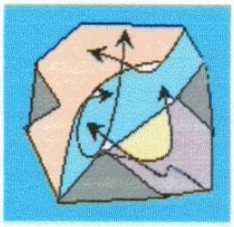

Let's go through a sequence of possible thought forms and see if by using a gradual easy process it may get us to where we want to go and we will be in complete control the whole time. First we have to start from where we are and in this case it seems to be in a negative pattern "I can't climb the Mountain".

It is unrealistic to think we can go from a fully believed concept of not being able to climb the mountain to its opposite in the next moment, "I can climb it". We can say it, but the underlying belief, is still working, I can't climb it. The mind is very literal, it believes what it sees to be true, and it doesn't buy the thought that the opposite is true too. It is one or the other, and so we need to coax this literal mind into moving somewhere else.

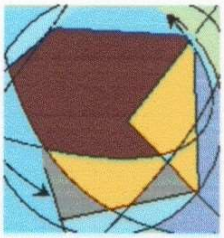

What is a belief that is close to our negative one of "I can't climb the mountain" but it is a little more willing to look at more information. What if I said "I know others have climbed the mountain". The mind is willing to believe this so it will move a little. This pattern may look like this:

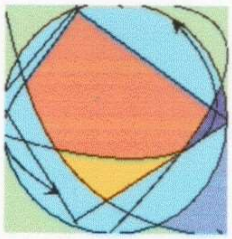

This isn't what we want yet but it is changing our vibrational pattern. So let's go to another one, how about: "I can see the others had to do it for the first time too, and maybe they thought they couldn't." OK the mind will believe this too, so this pattern may look like the figure on the next page:

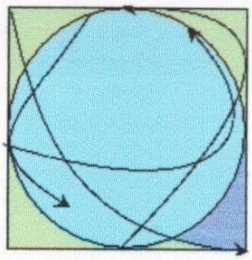

Then we may have the mind believe "it is true that I can do many of the things these other people can do." This pattern may look like this:

Now we are heading in a more positive direction and so maybe now I could believe "I think I can climb half way up the mountain." This may look like:

Then we may arrive at the idea that if someone else can climb the mountain I think I can too" and when it is believed, then we are similar to the vibrational pattern we first desired and it can be created. This one may look like:

Now our pattern is almost a match and it will create our positive desire. We went in some fairly large steps between patterns, for the sake of space needed to show it in this book, but you get the idea, it is a very predictable journey from what is believable in the moment, even if you are in a very negative energy, to gradually come to a positive one and then be able to create quite quickly what we desire.

This gradual process of change is what we have to do to believe we are still who we are. If we change too fast we may lose track of who we were and not know how we connect to all the information in our memory.

An example of this is to remember when we were a small baby and gradually grew into a toddler and then a small child. If one were to jump from being a toddler or small child into the body of a middle aged adult, the person wouldn't know who they were; they have no connection from the one small body to the big one, "is this really me?" I can't know it, because the mind has no familiar vibrational pattern to match to and it won't believe it to be true. It would be like dying and being born again, but lacking the connection of the two.

This step by step, gradual change from one pattern to another is how we do life here; we don't jump in and out of brand new forms. We have to have a link that connects these patterns and it is called the Law of Vibration. The previous form creates the next, and any deviation from this is not found in this reality. Our willingness to believe we are the person we know we are is fully based in this law and we must abide by it if we are to consciously create those things we desire. We must match these vibrational patterns in harmonized links congruent with the law.

Point of Vibrational Awareness

Life is to be lived
If you have to support yourself
You had bloody well
Better find some way
That is going to be interesting
And you don't do that
By sitting around
Wondering about yourself

Katherine Hepburn

Here's a thought: An argument (or a discussion) has two sides. If I take a position in the argument, then I only see "part" of the content as right or true from my perspective. The other "part" is wrong (false). By taking a position, I only accept (draw to me) one part and reject (push away) the other. The funny thing is I've noticed over the years that my stand 1, 10, 50 years later can be the exact opposite and I embrace it just as "truly". Could this be some sort of metaphor for trading???

I take a long position, its right; the short position is wrong. Later I take the short position as right and the long is wrong. There are two important points here.

1. Timing
2. Where I'm observing from

Most of us will agree that timing is very important, but few will notice the effects of ones position of awareness as important also.
By position of awareness, what I'm referring to is ones point of view as originating in wholeness or duality. Wholeness being complete, balanced, all the parts in one. Duality being separated parts, imbalanced, not one. Time, space, and form must be observed from a position of duality.

The Law of Three has a clue to what I'm suggesting. A simplified part of the Law of Three has to do with positive, negative and neutral.

Mathematically it could look like this:

A (Positive) + B (Negative) = C (Neutral)	A+B = C
C (Neutral) – A (Positive) = B (Negative) etc.	C-A = B

Duality is A and B, which is seen in time, space and form. Wholeness is C, viewed some other way.
A is a part of C, B is a part of C, C is whole

So in a trading example this could be:
I enter a long position A (call it positive) and this makes the short position B (negative). My position of awareness is in A (I entered it). So my view point is A=C–B. It isn't the long position that makes it positive in my frame of reference; it is that I entered it. It could be a short and it would be positive if it was my point of entrance into the market. Positive is moving into the next thing, negative would be the opposite.

So entering a long position is (A) and in our equality of A + B = C, (A) would now equal C – B. I'm seeing the truth (the equal sign (=)) in a confusing way; looking from a space time frame (A) into a set of two frames:

Frame 1 = space/time, polarized, duality (B)
Frame 2 = some other type of frame, Wholeness (C)

Confusion is never possible with just one, there must be two or more for confusion to exist. So when observing from an A or B position the confusion is inherent in the observation because it is a "part" we are comparing to two other elements on the other side of the equal sign. Our external perception is containing two different frame elements, C and the other A or B part, and this creates a tension of energy between the two as it attempts to resolve back into balance. Tension is confusion or parts out of harmony with the whole.

Observation from the (C) position, the neutral, has no confusion. Observation is from one frame - to one frame. (If this next idea is hard to see, don't worry about it, go on.) Even though there are two frames here, awareness is only in one place, on one side of the = sign. If the side of the = sign has two things (as in C – B) then awareness can be confused. There is no confusion with C or A+B. These are both separate and complete frames holding the same equivalent element)

If awareness (me) attaches to a part (a long trade) "A" then that becomes the source of awareness and this is an incomplete whole, a part of a whole, so it is not balanced in space/time. My body is balanced in space/time as a whole, so when this partial whole (A) is introduced into the mind in the brain of the body; what I experience physically from this addition is an emotion.

Emotion in the physical body is an energy adjustment to balance the system, because the system has shifted to imbalance. The "A" partial position that I shifted to in my awareness as a positive, would elicit the response in the body to compensate energetically to return back to balance. This response is the emotional reaction one feels when a thought is held that is not in agreement with a balanced environment.

In this case the long position I am attached to has a counter balancing position that I am not attached to, I am on one side of the line so to speak and not in the center where balance is. We do this all the time, and we adjust according to our degree of attachment and the present state of our foundational energy core that is connected with everything. When we focus our awareness from this biased, off center position, we are predisposed to drawing similar vibrational patterns into our conscious thinking and our perception begins to narrow to that field of thought. We are moving from a centered, overall view of the market, to a subjective view that creates less than the overall, complete view we would have from a centered position.

When a trade is entered long, we start looking for reasons that it's true. We want to see only evidence so we can resolve our imbalance, we are shifted to one side, the long side, and we want to be centered again, we want to feel at ease, not in tension. So our mind looks for a way to resolve this stress and it can do it by proving we are right, we are in truth, and so we can feel centered again. This biased gathering of information about the trade hinders us from seeing the whole picture.

When we are not in a trade and are able to look at both long and short trades as being ok, we see from a centered position that shows us the whole, the two parts included in our focus. When we enter one side, we shift to that as our center, and it only contains the one side, we are looking at half as a whole. We are not aware of the other half as being positive and so can't make a decision that includes all the information. We make our decisions by seeing only one side.

It would be like looking to the north to see what the weather will be like today, and unknown to us, is a big storm cloud coming from the south. If we could look at the whole sky we would do things differently, we wouldn't get caught in a storm without an umbrella. If we saw the whole picture in our trading experience, we would be able to avoid some of the oncoming storms, we would know to wait, or at least take an umbrella.

Becoming aware of our center, and how it includes or excludes elements of our trading experience, can be important information to have in understanding where emotion is coming from, why we are not profitable, why we make silly mistakes that we see so clearly after it is over. Wouldn't it be nice to recognize the silly mistake as it is happening, to become aware in time to avoid the consequences of not using clear thinking?

If every time I enter a trade and experience an emotion in the body, then I can know I am attaching to the position, (long or short) and I am not in a neutral, unbiased one. Tension can only exist when there are two things; there can't be tension in one thing, something else must act on it. So in knowing there are two sides to a trade, and I will automatically attach to the side I enter, I must find a way of also attaching to the other side. Not push it away, but welcome it into the trade and have it work in conjunction with the side I am in.

Seeing both sides as working together, and being willing to enter either at any time, will bring the two back together, and I can detach myself from the habit of thinking I must make this trade do what I want (make me money). I can start to see that the sides are working in conjunction with each other, and I can enter one side or the other, and I am willing to see both equally, that both have the same potential to make money for me if I will pay attention to the whole picture. To see where both are going, going together not separate ways.

My mind is at ease when it sees wholeness, and is in tension when it sees only a part and is looking for the rest of the story. It isn't comfortable when something is missing, and it wants to be balanced and whole and at ease. So I must give myself that comfortable environment, with all the information and stability to monitor my trading experience. Bringing tension and emotion into a trading experience is a handicap we don't want. We want to make it as easy and pleasurable as we can and with that, profit will be the natural outcome.

Greed and fear have been talked about forever, now we see that they are only a "part", not a whole perspective. To be successful, we must be centered, and trade from a viewpoint that sees everything and is willing to use it. We must pay attention to when something is off and know how to get it back in alignment. How to get back into connection with all of the elements of the trade and see all that is happening so we will be able to go with the movement of the price bars, not the movement of our mind trying to find a balance by getting out of imbalance.

The mental gymnastics we put our mind through in trying to find a stable place to operate from is amazing and we seldom know we are doing it. It is so much easier to focus the mind from the beginning and let it do our bidding with ease and all the resources. It's enjoyable to trade with a mind that is having fun instead of a mind that is going crazy trying to figure out how to be ok. Keep the mind from believing something is not ok and it is ok.

Don't take the mind into places where you know it won't be ok, you'll not be ok. Entering trades that are risky puts us into a risky place. Entering a trade we believe may fail, may fail. We create the foundation of the experience of the trade in our mind as we gather beliefs to support our new journey. We bring to us what we believe we will, and if our belief going into a trade is less than 100% positive, we are less than 100% positive in our experience.

Chapter 14

One Thought to Change the Mind

At bottom every man knows well enough
That he is a unique being,
Only once on this earth
And by no extraordinary chance
Will such a marvelously picturesque Piece of diversity in unity as he is Ever be put together a second time

Friedrich Nietzsche

It only takes one thought to change your mind, to turn you around and head in the other direction. The desire has to be clear enough and strong enough so that this other thought (the desire to turn around) doesn't take its place on the creating platform of your mind. If you can watch these thoughts from awareness and from there see the choice, you can still choose the desire you want. But if you are not aware and start re-acting to the new opposite desire (the thought to turn around) then it quickly starts to gather similar thoughts (matching vibrational patterns) and you are now in a new place in your mind, in your creative platform of manifesting, and it is not possible to continue to the original, you need to go back to the one that supports it.

I'm hiking again today as I'm writing this. I am about 2 hours into this hike and I'm on a trail I haven't been on before, it is beautiful walking under the boughs of the tall pines in the cool of the shade and the smells of the forest. I just saw a large bull moose walking across from me, surprised me at first, but now I'm relaxing into the enjoyment of watching something so big, lazily walking and eating breakfast in the forest next to me.

This is the realization of my desire, and it moved me out of bed this morning at 5:30 a.m. and now I'm telling you about it. I wanted to get up early, go to a beautiful new place and walk through the sights and smells of nature waking up in the morning. And here I am and this is what life is about, realization of desire.

Ok, as I watch my mind savoring this accomplishment a new desire is forming; I want to climb to the top of the mountain. So now I get to see if this is something I "really" want. Something I want in "reality".

I can't see a trail leading to the top from where I'm at, but I want to look over the edge of that top and see what is on the other side. That is my desire, and so for it to happen, I need to get a clear picture of this, and make sure I can do it and that I really want to do it. As I'm hiking, writing this down, I'm now high in the top of a glacier formed basin, not many trees, steep rocky slopes and the rocks I am standing on have been scoured smooth by thousands of years of ice scraping over the rock many years ago. It is incredibly smooth to touch, and has been painted a deep rich reddish brown from water and wind moving across it. The sun is higher in the sky now, and it is getting close to being hot when I'm not in the shade.

I see my thoughts start to line up on two sides of the new desire "to get to the top of the mountain". One side is where I see myself wanting to go there, knowing I can, and enjoying the journey. The other side is where I start to think of reasons why I can't or I'm not sure I really want to. I start planning my trek up to the top and the first thought is how I am going to do it. I can't see a trail, so I guess I need to make one. I don't know how long it will take, and will I have enough water or will I get too tired or….and I notice I am bringing up all these questions that if not answered in the right way, I won't be going up, I'll be turned around and heading down.

Anytime a question arises, it must be answered so it can be moved to the side so the thoughts of climbing to the top can return. Thoughts about "will I run out of water" don't get me to take the next step upward. The next step toward the top comes from a thought that says "I want to do it, I can do it, I am doing it". These other thoughts if given attention will move me in the direction of their energy, which may be down the mountain to find a drink or back to the shade of the pine trees if I'm thinking it is too hot.

So do I or don't I? This is the fork in the road and unless I say yes I'm going to be turned around and heading down the mountain. These forks are everywhere if I give them a place to start, (if I pay attention to them). Others could be "I'm tired", "I'm thirsty", "I don't like these mosquitoes", "do I really want to do this, it could be hard", "there are better things I could be doing". Can you see the fork being created?

When I change direction from wanting to go to the top, I place this new vibrational pattern on my creating shelf and it brings to it similar energy to create with. The sooner these errant thoughts are seen and the original one returns the easier it is to stay on course, but if given enough time this other thought will bring in all its friends of not going to the top, now it is harder.

Here is an example: I want to go to the top, BUT…I don't see a trail. ("Buts" are signs of forks in the road.) If I don't see a trail, then I'll have to walk through the underbrush, and I've done that before and gotten into some really thick stuff and it scratched me all up, and I didn't like that at all. I don't want to get scratched, and that reminds me of those damn mosquitoes that are buzzing around me, I don't want to get eaten by them either, home is a lot more comfortable than here. And so making a plan to go home isn't hard to do from here.

Ever notice when you are in a trade and things seem so wonderful because you know you want to win and make all this money and then something happens, a thought comes in and I question what is happening, and then another thought and soon I'm bailing out of the trade because it isn't what I want to do right now, yet after I get out, the market moves to where I was wanting it to go and I would have made money.

Then I kick myself for not doing what I said I would do, but I didn't notice why I did it. So the next time I do the same thing again and again or I do the opposite and stubbornly stay in a trade even when I know I should get out. I've lost my awareness of trading skillfully and now I am reacting to these invisible thoughts that take me off course. They aren't invisible; I'm just not paying attention to them.

Another thing to watch is external influences on my attention, like if its hot or cold, a rock in my shoe, an uncomfortable chair, or glaring screen, or anything that attracts your attention physically will create a fork. Trying to trade in an uncomfortable environment will distract your attention; will lead the mind to a different place than focused attention on realizing your desire of winning and making money. You will focus on relieving the uncomfortable feelings which means leaving your main focus. You are only going in one direction at a time, to remain focused on your primary desire; it helps to eliminate distractions, to provide your physical body experience with a comfortable environment, so it doesn't elicit differing desires.

Alright, I want to get to the top of the mountain. This is my desire and so I stopped and sat in the shade of a pine tree and ate my lunch and drank some water. I took my hiking boots off and got all the little rocks and stickers out, now that feels much better. Now I am back in the saddle again and ready to go to the top. It's good to find a way to come back to a positive energy or at least a neutral one if you get off on the wrong fork.

Trading a string of losers is a sign you're on the wrong path, heading down the hill instead of up it. Somewhere you took a wrong turn and need to get back on the right path. If you see yourself hesitating about your primary desire and hearing your thoughts say it's ok to quit. Then it's a good time to call time out and just stop until you're clear again. If you do choose to go the other way that's up to you, but at least you are conscious of it and will know what you are doing.

Ok, the mosquitoes are bugging me and so I'm going to get up and leave the nice shade and start hiking to the top. So as I look at which route I want to take, there are three possibilities. One is pretty much a vertical cliff—not what I want today. The next is a bunch of loose rocks with no vegetation at all in them. I remember hiking in this kind of stuff before, and it's like one step up and slide back ¾'s of a step, so I don't think this is the best either. The third possibility is a patch of green slope heading to the ridge over to my right, and though it is a little farther than just going straight up, it looks like the easiest and safest way.

So I start moving, one step at a time, toward the green slope and as I am walking I notice the wild flowers are all around me, millions of them and in all colors. They are really beautiful but I didn't even notice them when I was thinking of something else, if I wanted to hike to the top or not. This thinking activity can obscure everything else that is around me, because I'm paying attention to it. Now that I have made up my mind and no longer need to find answers to my questions, I can see what else is here; I can smell the roses so to speak. In this case I can smell the mountain flowers and I notice they really are very fragrant as I step through them.

I look at the horizon and see all the tops of distant mountains and the grandeur of this amazing view, I hadn't noticed this either. The birds are singing, the breeze is blowing and hiking is so fun, and come to think of it, it is easy too. I love this mind set for hiking, just like I like my mind set for trading when I'm knowing what is happening and I am connecting with the market and not my crazy thoughts about what could go wrong.

It's an adventure not a chore. It is too hard to force yourself to do something you don't want to do. Wait until you change your mind and come back to the easy way. Being proficient in changing our mind to be in agreement with the Law of Vibration is the thing we are looking for. Shifting back to the right path for creating our desires makes life fun and enjoyable again.

I just noticed the smell of the plants I am walking through right now, it is very fragrant, wow it is really beautiful here (I miss all this when I'm bouncing around in my head with opposing thoughts). When I haven't made up my mind and know for sure what I want to do, my mind keeps looking and it looks all over the place sometimes. When my mind is clear and I know what I want to do, I get to smell the flowers and see the beauty all around while my desire is happening.

I just came to a loose rock slide area, the one I didn't think I wanted to go through. But as I start into it, I see it is easy and I kind of like it. My, this mind does change, but I'm still going up and that's my desire. Now I'm in the flowers again, millions of them, like a scene from the movie "Sound of Music" as the Von Trapp family are marching across the flower filled mountain tops singing, "...The hills are alive, with the sound of music".

Ok, I just remembered why I didn't want to hike in the loose rock. It just got steeper and I'm in the loose rock and I take one step forward and slide a half of a step back. But it's ok, still want to get to the top so I'll work across to the more solid ground and continue. It's just one step then another and the top is getting much closer.

Now it's much steeper and steps are closer together and not as fast as before. But it's still ok, I don't have to match the old rate of climb, I can't anyway. I've got to match nature's pattern as well as matching my own. It reminds me of another hike I was on. As I watched 2 guys rock climbing a sheer granite face, I noticed it took the first guy maybe 20 minutes to go about 10 feet to where he could find a place to wait for the second guy. Then the second guy went the same 10 feet in maybe a minute or two. It isn't how fast; it is the journey and getting there.

It's really steep right here and I just noticed another thought come in and it almost stopped me. It said "what if you can't get back down" and then all these matching thoughts came rushing in to prove it is true. "The rocks are loose and it's too steep", "you don't want to slip and fall here, no one will find you and the bears will eat your dead carcass." Wow, I mean what's this about? Do I want to play with this kind of vibration, this:" I'm going to die stuff"? No, and I smile because it is kind of funny. (Unless it isn't because I believe it, give it attention and energy to draw all its friends into the game and I get to experience it all.)

I say "no", I don't want to play this game; I want to keep climbing up. Wow, this is really steep and I'm in loose rocks again…stop….get it together Neall, Ok another step, then another one. I can see the top. I just realized again, every step right now is my life, this is what I'm doing here, enjoy this. It isn't the top I want right now, it is my next step. The top will come but my experience is in the next step.

Ok, now this is really steep and I am on all fours, hands and feet holding on as I step up and slide back. Oh yah, that green piece of mountain I was going to go up. Well, it's maybe a 100 yards to my right and I'm in the middle of this very steep loose rock and cliff part of the mountain. What happened? Somehow I took one of those forks in the road and now I'm not on the path I wanted to be on.

I remember thinking, "oh, this loose rock isn't that bad and so I stayed in it", but that was before it got steeper. I could see the steep part when I first made the decision to go to the green part and not the rocks. But when I was in the first part of the loose rock, I couldn't see how steep it got at the top any more and I forgot about it, and now I'm on all 4's climbing like a monkey or mountain goat. Well, it's more like a monkey because a mountain goat would never come this way, it would know better.

I made it!!!! I'm at the top, can you believe it? Well, yes...sure I can believe it…I had to believe it to make it here. If I didn't believe I could, I wouldn't be here. Wow. This is an amazing view. It isn't what I imagined, it is even more beautiful. It looks like a moonscape on the steep rocky slopes across this glacier carved piece of pristine mountain magnificence. These new forming mountains with very steep rocky slopes edge into a meadow at the bottom, with a small lake surrounded by trees and green undergrowth. Another smaller lake is just below this first lake and then it continues down through a small canyon.

This is so remote, I wonder if anyone has been right here where I'm at? I have this thought come in that says, "you may be the first one here Neall, you're pretty cool aren't you". I kind of smile, I'm going to enjoy the thought, I earned it, that was a hard hike, and besides, I am probably the only one dumb enough to hike up this way. Anyway, I'm glad I made it here, and I'm glad for each step and for being willing to pay attention to my self, to my mind so that I could pay attention to what is all around me.

I should have brought a camera and taken some pictures of this wonderland and showed you, huh? Nah, this is my journey and you need to do your own. It isn't the same experience unless you do your own; pictures are nice but no comparison to the whole journey, step after step, which is life

Now I get to go down. Going down is a totally different mind set. There is no confusion with direction, we are going home, not up and that is very clear. There is no way I'm going back up. So it just got really easy, and now I choose which way I want to go down (the shortest way). Did you notice I have some underlying beliefs working here? "I'm tired after this kind of hike", "I can rest at home and get something to eat there". I could move to another place in my mind and climb another mountain if I wanted to.

The body is very willing to follow the desires we place before it, but we usually tell it, it is tired and so it accommodates us. We think about how hot it is and the body's experience of the heat is more available to us than when we are thinking about something else. So if we pay attention, and choose the platform of beliefs we want to come down the mountain in, then our descent will be much more pleasant than if we default to the tired and thirsty routine we usually do. Pay attention and choose the thoughts that feel good, not bad.

Chapter 15

Trading with the Law of Vibration

Those who restrain desire
Do so
Because theirs
Is weak enough
To be restrained

William Blake

Everything we have done has a past record of all the steps we took to get from the beginning to the end. It is has a detailed list of what happened when and how and how long it took and where we went and how much we gained or lost, changed or didn't change, etc. This record is called the "past" and if we look at it closely, we will see the process of how to make it happen again and again for everything we want to experience.

The past is the blueprint for making more past and this "more past" is called the future before it moves through the present moment into the past. It is very easy to create a future when we understand that this movement of past to the present is the machine that creates the future. This flow of time is sometimes confusing, because we can think we are going either way. Is the flow from past to future or from the future to the past? Well, the answer is yes, and it is also no.

What are we looking for? In looking at the flow of time, there must be two places that something comes from and goes to. The two points create space and the movement from one to the other can be considered time. If we are looking at this kind of time, then what do we want to do with it? Since we can create anything we want, and we can choose what is true and what isn't, we must decide on want are we trying to do. If our desire is to trade the markets and make money, then what is going to be to our advantage in choosing how to use this kind of time in our journey to wealth in the market?

What we will do now is look at several examples of diverse activities and make a note of the similarity they have with our activity of trading the markets for profit and pleasure. Being able to transcend the differences of each and see the pattern that underlies them, that we can use in trading, will give us a successful method for realizing a creative way of manifesting what we want. Of creating a trading method that produces the outcome we desire, that gets us to the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow we are traversing.

We will look at three different activities (desires) and then apply the same means to a trading desire. Keep in mind as we are looking at each one, that these are random activities and the way we choose to look is also random. It is the underlying movement we are experiencing that is important. It is the way time flows for us in the direction of what we want, in the direction of the desire of trading profitably and having fun doing it, that we are really looking for. You can establish your desire anyway you want and it will still follow the path we are going to take.

It is assumed that you haven't realized your desire for trading as profitably as you want or that trading still entices you to look for more joy and happiness, ease and pleasure as a desire. If you are satisfied and don't have this desire, then you are not seeking a new experience in trading and you don't need to do anything about it. But most of us are willing to do more, make more money, have more fun etc. So it is assumed we desire something we haven't done yet. A new experience that we can't find in our past, but must be generated and become our past as it moves through our experience in the present moment of doing it.

The following activities that will be described are assumed to have not been done by us before, and we are attempting to do them for the first time, to create them in our experience and observe them move into our past. The first activity will be the desire to climb a mountain. First we make it clear, we define it with such definition that there is no doubt as to what we want to do. We must say which mountain it is we want to climb; there are lots of them you know. So we pick the one we want to climb.

[1st]

Let's choose Mt. St. Helens as the mountain we want to climb. If you are old enough to remember, it is the volcano that erupted in the State of Washington, USA in May of 1980 blowing 1300 feet off the top of the mountain and is the largest volcanic eruption in US history. This could be a worthy activity to create, climbing this magnificent and historically significant mountain. Here are some pictures of what we are interested in.

Before eruption around 1950

During eruption 1980

After Eruption a few years later

So let's proceed, how do we bring this new desire into our real space/time experience and move it from a future event through the present moment into our past? OK, we have a clear desire of climbing Mt. St. Helens, so where is it? How do we do it? When do we do it? How long will it take? What do I need to do it? And perhaps the most important question is; do I really want to do it? Let's look at each question and find our answer, and see if it has a possibility of being created in our experience.

Mt. St. Helens is located approximately a 2½ hour drive south of Seattle, Washington (150 miles) and a 1½ hour drive north from Portland, Oregon (65 miles). We need to get from where we are to one of these two major cities, probably by air. So we will need to get reservations on a flight. So let's pick Portland. We will purchase a ticket and arrange transportation to the airport we are going to fly out of. Once in Portland we need ground transportation for the 65 mile trip north, so we arrange for a rental car and will need to know how long to rent it for.

This will take us into our other questions, which has to do with how long will it take and when? Seems like a lot of detail here doesn't it? Maybe this world is running on exactness and details are important, especially details that fit into the present environment or not. Let's remember to come back and answer this question of how long to reserve the rental car for.

It would be helpful to have a map to follow so we can find our way in the car, we will be driving to the mountain, the pilot did the driving in the air, but we need to know when to turn the wheel here. Maps are plentiful today, and so we find our route from Portland to Mt. St. Helens. If we want, let's just rent a car with a GPS system and follow its directions. In any event, we need to have accurate and clear directions.

Now when we arrive at Mt. St. Helens are there any restrictions that we need to know about, that could keep us from the climb? We look for information on the internet and find that permits are required to climb above 4800 feet of elevation. We find that the elevation of our mountain is 8,365 ft. so we must arrange for a permit. We find an online link that will let us register, so this seems to solve this problem.

Now when do we want to get the permit for, this is deciding the "when" we want to do it. We read that late spring and early fall are popular times to hike it, so we choose September 14. We find some helpful information on the web that says:

Most climbers use the Monitor Ridge Route from Climbers Bivouac. This route gains 4,500 feet in five miles to the crater rim at 8,365 feet elevation. Although strenuous, this non-technical climb is suitable for people in good physical condition who are comfortable scrambling on steep, rugged terrain. Most climbers complete the round trip in seven to twelve hours.

So we see that it will take a day to climb, and we decide that we can figure out how many days we want the car now. If we take one day to get from our starting point to Portland and then drive to the mountain. The next day we will hike it, and then take another day relaxing and then return home the next day. So we need the car for 4 days, and this also tells us when to book the return flight. This seems to be coming together, and so far it sounds do-able. Let's get some information on what we need for the hike and where we can find the trail up the mountain.

We find this information and some maps on a web site: The route begins at Climber's Bivouac, located at the end of Forest Road 830, south of the volcano. At 3,700 feet elevation, Climber's Bivouac has the highest vehicle access on Mount St. Helens. Start on Ptarmigan Trail #216A which climbs 1,100 feet in 2 1/4 miles to timberline at 4,800 feet elevation. Toilets are located at Climber's Bivouac and near timberline.

Above timberline, the route generally follows Monitor Ridge, climbing steeply through blocky lava flows and loose pumice and ash. From timberline the route is marked with large wooden posts to about 7,000 feet elevation. The upper 1,300 feet of the route is unmarked and covered with loose, rock, pumice and ash.

On your descent, take care to stay on route, a minor detour may put you far off route at timberline.

Ok, it looks like we can find our way up and back, lots of other people have done it and so can we. What do I need to take for a 7 to 12 hour hike, and what kind of physical condition do I need to be in, and how long will it take for me to be in that condition? Each of us will answer these questions differently, and now we are entering a unique part of the journey that may not be the same for everyone. Most people will fly and rent a car, and read a map and buy a permit, but some may need 6 months to prepare physically and some are already in shape and it isn't a concern. Some will want more water, or different foods, or clothing, etc. These are individual choices and must be made individually. Ok, we have enough information to see that it is an achievable desire and now we need to decide if we really want to do it.

Let's take one more look at the mountain:

Yes it is a beautiful piece of real estate and not another one like it, and I do want to experience the exhilaration of accomplishing something new and to stand on the top and know that I did it, that I created this amazing experience. There is more we might say, and then we come to the nexus of our creation process, do I say yes or no?

Each step of the way, we have a choice, do I do it or not. What is the moving force that let's us say yes and do it, what is the force that stops us. For this activity to happen, for us to climb Mt. St. Helens on September 14, we must keep saying yes, because one "no" turns us around and we go in a different direction than climbing the mountain.

Here is where we use the Law of Vibration to know where these yes's and no's come from and how we can be the one to consciously make the choice and not be surprised by our lack of not doing what we thought we wanted to do. Like wanting to make money but I don't, what happened? Like wanting to climb a mountain and I don't.

It is the relationship of my creative structural platform within my mind that I am using to create my new desire. Matching vibrational belief patterns to vibrational desire patterns with a sustaining focus is the function of the creative structural platform. If these two don't match, if the energy patterns are too different in nature and can't support each other, then the creation cannot be made or sustained in this space/time environment. And each part of this creation process must have a matching energy pattern to bring it into space/time and hold it while the rest of the process finds its place and supporting structure.

Everything is balanced and supported by everything else, and when there is a weak link in the chain and it fails to hold a part, the whole structure shifts to retain balance and the desire is shifted also, shifted out of ones experience and is not available as a material experience. Not until it matches and is held with a sustaining anchor, will it provide the result we are wanting.

So to have all the yes's line up in proper sequence, the underlying supporting beliefs must match the new desire pattern that is looking for a place to reside. If I have a desire to climb the mountain on September 14th and I have a conflicting appointment on the same day, then I find which has the most support in my belief structure. "I deserve to enjoy myself and have leisure time whenever I want", or an opposing belief may be that "work is always more important and comes before any leisure".

If the second belief has been used a lot in the past, and is a familiar pattern, well established; and the first one, the desire for leisure is fairly new and hasn't been used as much, the second energy pattern will be more dominate, and will be the default if the person is undecided. By not consciously holding to the desire of I want to climb the mountain, and becoming confused between two choices, the most dominate pattern will be the choice. The old way with the deepest groove will be the way the energy travels and it will create the old way, the old stuff that is not what you said you wanted when you decided to climb a mountain.

Only with a new supporting structure and a willingness to keep saying yes to your new desire, will you continue to create it. It is too easy to stop being in conscious direction of your creations and default to your automatic mode of just doing what you have always done, and defaulting back to the status quo. Newness is not the old, it must be given a place to reside and it must be sustained with stable support energy, a belief pattern that is true.

If you really don't think it is ok to take time off and have fun, then you will keep working and not make all the steps to get to the top of the mountain. If you think it is too dangerous, you are not in shape, it really isn't safe, it costs too much, it is too far away, etc. Then these supporting structures will not create climbing the mountain. Can you see what your current belief structure is? If not, then you are trying to drive the car with blinders on and you will crash. You will try to trade and be successful and you will lose. You will be the victim on your own unknowing and be lost to how you change anything.

Let's summarize our desire to climb Mt. St. Helens with a simple flow chart that identifies graphically each step of the way. By completing each step we are guaranteed of accomplishing our desire. Because of limited space on the page, we will only choose the major items on our flow chart, but you can fill in the detail, and it is good if you do. The more detail and precise one is in creating the steps to creating a desire, the easier it is to manifest. If you can see it clearly, you can write it down. If you can't see it clearly, you can't write it down, and it is a good clue to stop and get clear before we go any farther. Going fast in the wrong direction isn't productive; it isn't how to create desire into form.

This is a lot like planning a trip or vacation except we are going to get into shape physically which will take a little more preparation. But it is the same process, you've done it before, nothing new, except this time we are going to pay attention to what we are doing and thinking. We are going to monitor our mind and make sure we don't get sidetracked.

What do you think? Did you make it to the top and return home with a satisfying smile on your face and an eager anticipation to tell all your friends you did it? If you can go through the steps in your mind and have a willingness to say yes to each one, then you can do it, if you have any "no" come into the mind it will stop everything. You must really be sure you want to do it all, and you will know by the feeling you are experiencing right now as you think about it. Is it an exciting, happy feeling of doing it or is the feeling subdued with questions and doubt? The energy you create with is the excited, happy feeling. The doubtful feeling creates very little. A fearful feeling is a sign that you are not willing to create it, in fact you are more willing to un-create it, to go in the opposite direction.

Next is our second example and for this one we will use a simple activity that has been done for eons, but in our era fewer and fewer seem to be doing it. We are going to plant a garden and grow some food to eat. Perhaps you have had the chance to eat fresh grown vegetables and fruit from either your own or a friend's garden. It is a wonderful experience to taste the freshness of vine ripened tomatoes, fresh peaches off the tree, vine ripe strawberries or raspberries. It is a much different experience than the ones we buy in a store that have been picked green and ripen in a box or on the shelf.

It is a simple task, done by all kinds of people in all kinds of ways, but what we are interested in is the journey we are going to take in our mind, watching the process of "creating" unfold. Learning how to create what we want is the basis for getting what we want. We have decided we want something more, or we wouldn't be reading this book. We have decided we want more out of our trading experience and are willing to change so we can have it. Knowing what to change is the reason we are reading this book and why we are opening to seeing more, seeing a different possibility and being willing to embrace it.

First let's clarify what we want. We need to select what we want to eat fresh out of our garden. How about tomatoes and spinach? Now here is the first critical question, do I like tomatoes and spinach enough to want to follow through with several months of sustained desire to get to the harvest time at the end? If the answer is "I really don't like spinach, or I'm allergic to tomatoes" then this isn't going to work. This isn't a desire you want, it is a desire you don't want. So if tomatoes and spinach isn't it, then choose what is, and make sure the beginning of the creation process has a desire that you want to have, clearly wanting to have.

We'll do this with trading a little later, but it could be something you start thinking about right now as we go through these examples. What is it I really want and I'm willing to have in my trading experience? Don't over look what you don't want; they are the subtle clues to the things that could come up to take us off track.

Ok, tomatoes and spinach, why do I want them? What is the beautiful picture here that I can see myself enjoying, having fun with, and excited to be willing to spend time doing this to get what we will harvest? Maybe you see yourself sitting down at your table with your favorite friends or loved ones and you bring your home grown treasures and see the expression on their faces and that makes you happy.

Or perhaps you see your self holding the prize in your hand, and as you prepare the fresh spinach or taste the first bite out of the tomato it is "as good as it gets", it is a wonderful fulfilling experience you are happy to have. It is enough and you are really willing to do what it takes to have this experience. If there is a clear passion about growing the tomatoes and spinach then proceed. If there isn't then stop and find what can be this passion.

Until clarity and passion are present to sustain a willingness to hold the desire throughout the time and space required to manifest it, then it cannot happen. So assuming we have a real desire to have home grown tomatoes and spinach, let's start our journey through time and space and create it. First we select a variety of seeds or choose a variety of young plants ready to plant. For the tomato, we decide we like a large juicy variety called beefsteak tomatoes, and the spinach can be any variety, we aren't that fussy about spinach yet.

Now we notice we aren't that clear about the spinach, will this be a problem down the road. If we are really clear it doesn't matter what variety, that most in the seed packets will work ok, then it is ok. The clarity is in knowing we want to have spinach in so many days and we will be ok with trusting what the seed manufacturing company has for us. We don't have to create everything; most things we will use have already been created in a very acceptable way and are available for us to trust and use.

We need to make a time line of when we want it. This will have to fit into the natural process of how plants grow and produce fruit. Depending on where we live and what kind of climate we live in, we usually plant in the spring when it starts to warm up and after a few weeks or months, we can expect to harvest our fruit if we have cared for them properly. If you live in a climate where the growing season is longer, you have a longer window of opportunity to plant. Some varieties of spinach and tomatoes mature sooner than others, and so this may be something we look at.

We decide we are going to grow them from seeds; we go to our local seed retailer and find the beefsteak tomato seeds and the spinach seeds. We read the directions on the packages and it tells us what kind of soil to use (a loamy, well aerated soil) and when to plant them for our area. The tomatoes are best planted later in the spring around June and the spinach should be planted early in the spring, in March.

The seeds are to be planted in a sunny location, a half inch below the surface and kept damp until sprouting occurs. We need to keep the area clear of weeds, bugs and anything that could trample it. Keep it protected from frost and water it when it becomes dry. Now the seeds, soil, water and sunshine do the rest. We just have to plant them and what we put in the ground is what we get out of the ground.

We can't plant carrot seeds and expect to get tomatoes. We can't use the wrong kind of soil and plant in the cold of winter or water at odd times and expect to get the same harvest as when we plant and take care of them properly. We get what we sow; we get what we start with, only in a more developed form. This is the Law of Vibration, like attracts like, patterns of vibrational energy match similar patterns and sustain each other in cyclic harmony.

As you may have already surmised, thoughts are seeds, and are planted in a matrix soil of vibrational compatibility to produce a desire in manifest reality. The seed thought we select, soil (vibrational belief structure) we plant them in and how we take care of them by maintaining the proper vibrational pattern to attach to, will determine if we get a fruit we can eat, a desire we want to experience.

So even though many of you reading this have planted seeds before and eaten the offspring of the plant, did you pay attention to your part and the seeds part? Did you notice, you only had to select what you wanted, place it in a fertile spot and just watch over it so something didn't kill it (no opposite vibrational patterns to change the structure and process)?

Creating within the bounds of the Law of Vibration is a simple process of choosing clearly, providing a matching belief structure and letting the vibrational patterns join by allowing sufficient time and space for the developing new desire to come into time and space.

We don't need to know how this new creation is energetically composed, we only need to know that we clearly want it and allow it to happen, not stop it prematurely. The Universe is very good at maintaining a balanced system of energy, and when we learn how to join in this balance, we can have whatever we can clearly see because this energy will follow the laws it is working within.

Similar patterns support similar patterns and are sustained in time/space by existing stable time/space patterns. These stable time/space patterns are our belief structures, and when held in awareness they are the creative platforms we use to establish a new form of this pattern which we are calling a desire, a want, something we don't have yet but are willing to allow.

Let's show a simplified version of how the garden grew the tomatoes and spinach we wanted to eat.

Let's go on to our third example: this one is a little different and will require a different focus and we probably haven't done this particular kind of detailed creation. Though we are going to keep it simple and not include all the steps, we will do enough that it gives us the chance to see how everything, if clearly drawn out and each step completed, will bring success. We are going to build a cabin in the mountains, and I don't mean we are going to hire a contractor to build it for us; we are going to do the building. So how do we go about knowing what needs to be done and in what order, to build our cabin?

First let's make our desire as clear and detailed as we can, also deciding how soon we want it, why we want it, and if we are going to fit it into our present assets or is it something we need to create more money for. Where do we want to have it? As we answer each of these questions it becomes clearer and we know what we need to hold as a creative belief platform to make it happen.

Let's say we want it by the fall of next year, we want it in a mountain area that has snow in the winter and so building it in the winter isn't going to be one of the activities that we want to include in the plan, so we will start building this summer and then again in the spring of the following year, with a completion by end of fall. We want a two bedroom smaller cabin, around 1000 square feet and two levels, with an entrance in the front and back, a stream near by and a path and small arched bridge over the stream.

We want a detached two car garage and a deck around three sides of the cabin and one out from the second level. It will be made of framed wood construction, and rock facing on the exterior, with a shake shingle roof, two fireplaces on opposite sides and a storage shed off to the rear. There is a secluded drive up to the cabin and several walk ways into the forest and surrounding area. A small garden area and a bird and animal shelter with pens and fences are in the rear of the property.

Inside there is a kitchen with gas appliances, and a gas furnace with a large propane tank hidden in the trees, a septic system, a running water system and an electric source, either from power lines or a generator on the property. There is a dining area, a pantry, a sitting area, a master bedroom with bath and a guest bedroom with a common bath for the rest of the cabin. There is a studio on the second floor with a northern exposure for lighting, and a southern exposure for the deck. The interior wall and ceiling is painted, a wood floor and fur rugs in front of the fireplaces and in the bedrooms. There are windows that open with screens for cross ventilation, and whole cabin is wired for surround sound.

Well this is a good start to clarifying what we want, and with this beginning we can draw up a floor plan to fit the property we select. It would be a different plan if the ground had a steep slope that we had to fit to, as opposed to a flat open area. So we draw a preliminary sketch of what we want and where we want it. Then if we want to draw a finished blueprint with all the schematics for framing, electrical, plumbing, HVAC, finish details etc. then we would have to learn about all the technical requirements. Some of us could do this, most of us couldn't and probably wouldn't be interested in learning it right now, because the focus is to build the cabin starting this year and finishing it next year.

This is a good example of how we can become distracted trying to learn everything by our self in the process of creating a desire. We must keep in mind the specific desire we are creating. Learning how to draw blueprints for our cabin may not be the enjoyable part of building it. If it is, then we are on course and need to provide time for it, if it isn't then we need to be clear we will turn that task over to someone else and keep with our main focus. So in this case, because most will not have time or desire to learn this, we will take it to an architect or draftsman, and have our sketches drawn into working blueprints.

So we have found our property, hired a real estate professional to take care of the legal aspects and we apply for a building permit with our blueprints. This will all take place early in the year so we can begin with construction by summer. The first activity in the process after we obtain permission from the local building department is to clear the site and layout the position for the foundation. We hire an earthmoving firm and they bring in their heavy equipment and clear away the vegetation and level the area to the elevation of the footings for the foundation. We stake out the dimensions for the foundation and underground electrical and plumbing. We bury the wire and pipes with appropriate stub ups per our plan and form the footings and order a load of concrete from a local ready mix plant. We calculate the number of yards of concrete we need and place rebar in the forms and anchor bolts for the walls before we pour. We let it set over night and then remove the forms the next day.

Now we have a secure base to start building on, our foundation if properly set; will keep us in sync with the rest of the plan. Starting out right is very important if we want an easy and efficient way to build. If the foundation is off, the rest of the building will be off and sooner or later, we will need to correct it. The longer it goes in the wrong direction, the longer it takes to correct it. It is the Law of Vibration again, like will produce like, similar vibrations will match with similar vibrations and if they are too different they will not manifest in the form we desire.

We next form and pour the concrete foundation walls with rebar and cut outs for pipe, wire and ductwork. The blueprint shows us everything, and all we need to do is to remember to include it in the proper place and at the right time. If we leave out a pipe that is to go under the concrete and we pour our concrete it becomes very hard to get the pipe in now. Doing everything according to the plan will make it easy and doable, just one thing at a time in the right time and place. This is that time/space stuff again.

We hire our earthmovers again to backfill the foundation wall and bring the elevation of the floor to the proper height so we can pour the concrete floor. Then we get the concrete truck out again and pour our floor and finish it. With our floor poured we have a very good base to work from now, it just gets easier and easier as we move forward in our plan. It is a step by step process and when done in the right order will guarantee the finished product we are wanting.

Now we order all the construction materials for framing the walls, roof, upper floor and decks. The plans give us all the dimensions we need to cut our material to and lay it out to be nailed with a convenient nail gun and compressor we rented from a local rental firm. We are having a great time because it is a lot easier than we expected, because before we studied the plans and knew exactly what we wanted to build we were somewhat confused.

"Not knowing" leads to confusion, to a mind that is not clear, is not a happy mind, a mind that enjoys life because it is in a process of searching for answers and can't relax into the "known" plan with a confident pleasure. A mind at ease is called joy. A mind lost in a search for answers to problems is a mind that is far from happiness and experiencing the discordant vibrations of dissimilar energy patterns. It is much less capable of directed creative focus. It is immersed in a sea of mismatching patterns trying to sort them out to find what will work.

Remember we had the plan drawn out in the beginning and all we have to do is return to the plan and we can settle our confusion and know what we are to do next. The plan will work if we follow it, so our job is to pay attention and keep focused on our desire, and maintain this focus and the manifestation of the form in time/space comes into our experience. Without this focus it can't find a place of connection or sustaining energy to maintain it.

Now we build and stand our walls with exterior sheeting, and put the second floor framing on top of the walls and lay the floor sheeting, and then frame the second floor walls. The roof structure is next with sheeting and waterproofing underlayment. Then we put on the roof shingles and trim the eaves and soffits, install all windows and insulate the exterior walls and roof. We winterize the cabin for the winter and come next spring we will start with the interior.

We can do some of the interior work during the winter if we want, everything is possible and we can modify our plan at any time, as long as it fits our plan to finish by the next fall. We want to make sure we are staying on track and in this case getting ahead of schedule is ok.

We start running all the electrical wires and plumbing in the walls and heat vents and hang the sheetrock. We finish the sheetrock with a stucco texture and paint all the interior walls and ceilings.

Then hang the doorframes, install base and casings, fill nail holes, prime and paint. We install our furnace and hot water system; install the range, refrigerator, countertops, sinks, cabinets, bathroom toilets, sinks, shower and tub, tile flooring, wood flooring and hardware and light fixtures, switches, and outlets, thermostats and heating controls, roof vents and carpeting.

We are complete except for the exterior rock finish but we decided that to rock the exterior facing on the cabin will take a lot of time and requires a good deal of physical exertion, we want to enjoy this part of the building process and not make it a hard task, so we are going to apply the rock in the following years, a little at a time, and extend the joy of building our cabin for years to come. Each following year, we will add rocks to the exterior walls of the cabin in a fun way, an activity that we can use to remember each year we are there because it will have a specific area of rock associated with it.

As the years go by, and we are using our cabin, we can notice a particular rock or area of rock and remember oh yah that was the year the bear came into the yard and that rock reminds me of the time the lightning hit the big pine tree over there, and that one was the time we got snowed in for four days and had the best time of over lives playing like survivors in a secluded artic camp. This seems like a nice way to keep creating newness with our cabin experience.

Now we stand back and take a look at what we just did. We just built a cabin on our beautiful mountain lot and can now open the door, walk inside and enjoy our creation. We have already been enjoying it while we were building it, because we didn't try to do anything before it was ready to do, we followed our plan in a realistic way and now we are experiencing it.

It's a wonderful feeling to see what we did, we love the feeling of being in sync with a natural law that is predictable and very easy to know and follow. It works for everything, everywhere and any time. It is this Law of Vibration that keeps manifest form in time and space for our experience here in this Universe and we have it available for our use as soon as we decide to pay attention to its simple requirements.

Well we did a pretty good job of describing what we want and we made a time line, a schedule of when we wanted it. When we follow this detail we will realize our desire in front of us, a desire that turns into a form we can walk into and experience as our cabin. Now let's draw a graphic time line and see how our plan would look in chart form. We have a lot of individual activities that we must do and not a lot of space to show it on this page, but you can add the rest of the detail if you want.

Creation isn't some kind of hocus pocus covert operation that is only known by a select few. It is something we are doing every day but probably failing to notice how we are doing it. We have looked at three fairly simple ways of creating something new, and it's a very straight forward and simple process. It can be applied to anything and will bring about the same result. It is following the laws of nature, the laws of vibration, and the laws of clarity yields clear creations.

[4th]

Ok, now we have been through three random activities, now let's do the same with a trading experience. We will watch the activity in the mind as our focus and see if what we accomplished in the previous three will apply here as well. The first thing we need to do is to clarify our desire, what do we want? This may sound like something that is already evident, yet is it? Is this desire in a clear and definitive form that can be written down and placed into a time line with steps identified and placed in proper order and in exact detail?

To just say I want to be profitable isn't in detail, in a time line, in accordance with what we want to do here. Like climbing the mountain, growing tomatoes and building a cabin, we couldn't just say I want it. We have to say how we want it, when we want it, where we want it, how much we want and all the rest of the detail so we can put it within the framework of our creative system, on the platform of compatible vibrational patterns to facilitate its development and to sustain it in our time/space environment.

So let's just sit down where it's quiet and write down all the things we want in our trading experience. Each of us can do this if we are serious about changing our present environment into what we want, into a new present environment that reflects our natural rhythms with trading the markets. Yes we can trade like others do, but this is not an effortless easy flowing way of trading that our way is. Finding "our way" is going to allow us to connect to the flow of creative energy fully and enjoy any outcome we are willing to hold as a desire. Any other way will require an effort to shift some other pattern to a compatible one that we can create from.

We can't grow tomatoes from carrot seeds; we can't climb the mountain without getting to it and we can never go into our cabin until all the steps are completed. Our trading experience must be a real desire, a passionate longing from our natural rhythm, like a heart beat that beats our whole life without any attention to it. It is easy because it is what it is and is doing what it is. Trying to make a heart beat by constant attention to it, making it do it the right thing the right way and always monitoring it so it doesn't stop, is a lot of work. It is so much work, we can't do it consciously. We must rely on it doing itself. Day and night, the heart is built to do its beating and we couldn't do that with our mind. We have to sleep, we want to do other things, and so we let the heart be in its natural rhythm and this lets the mind be in its natural rhythm, its effortless, powerful rhythm.

Before you read what I am going to write, you may want to write your description of a perfect trading environment, a perfect trading desire for you. Just pen and paper and a little quiet place and let the mind tell you what it wants, what it wants to have to be happy and powerfully engaged in trading for profit and pleasure, excitement and ease, satisfaction and success. Your clarity is the beginning point of this activity, it must be what you really want, and you are willing to want it until it manifests in time/space and then want to sustain it for as long as you desire. Get your paper and pen, spend some time being honest with the self and then read on.

Ok, if you have done it, then apply your details to the Law of Vibration's requirements and they will manifest, they have too. If you haven't written your way down on paper yet, you kept reading on, then you will change nothing in your experience, you will only add more information to your memory and it will not be useful until you find your desires important enough to clarify them and place them in a creative matrix to gestate into form. We can get into a habit of wanting more and more information and it is a time consuming activity that will not bring our desires into our experience.

It is like looking for the Holy Grail of forecasting and trading. When a person keeps searching for the perfect way to do anything, it is like they are trying to figure out all the details and mechanics of how it has to happen. This is a common desire by many traders but is has a subtle edge we need to be aware of. What we desire is to know "how to do it", means we do not have a clear desire yet to "do it".

The desire to know how is the experience of searching for it before we get it. We aren't clear that our most important focus is to "do it", when the focus is to look for it. If we are looking for it, we haven't seen it yet or we wouldn't have to look for it. It's like it is hidden from our view, we don't know what it looks like.

Not knowing what something looks like is not clear. We are not holding a clear picture of our desire and so it can not be matched with similar patterns because its pattern is not known. The focus on the desire must be on it, not on how to get it. How the seed grew into the plant is not our business, all we have to do is get clear we want to plant it and have a fruit at the end of a few months and take care of it so it can survive until then. We don't have to know how our legs can lift the foot and move it another step up the mountain; we only have to want it to and be clear we don't want to stop it for some other reason.

Looking for the Holy Grail is a desire in itself, it is innocent and an appropriate choice we can make in our life's journey. But if we have a desire to trade profitably and make money and have fun then this is another desire, and we must prioritize which is the one we want to do right now? Looking for the Holy Grail is a distraction from the desire of wanting to trade successfully right now. We don't need to find the Holy Grail to trade successfully, we only need to become clear that we really do want to trade successfully right now and hold the desire where it will manifest and be supported.

Ok, I'm going to list a bunch of random thoughts of what I want for a trading experience, and if you haven't done it yet this is your last chance to do it before you see my biased ideas. If you have done it, good for you, you are abiding with the natural laws we are talking about and with your clarity you will have it come into form in your experience if you maintain it. If you haven't, I understand, I do it all the time too, until I get clear that I really want it, and then I can do it.

"I desire a trading experience that is easy for me to do, easy to understand and I like to do it, I look forward to getting up in the mornings I'm going to trade because I am excited to do it, I love my experience of trading because I am free to do it when I want, and free to do other things at times I want. I am able to trade without the need to sit in front of a screen for hours or days to find a trade. I can trade any time frame and I like the flexibility to trade any time frame - tic chart and one minute time frame to monthly charts.

I know I want to be successful in making money, in winning, and in connecting with the same laws the markets are being created by. I desire to understand my connection with the market, my connection with natural law and my connection to my conscious desire to create abundance and joyful experiences from trading. I desire to have two trading areas created for trading. A room set aside in my house, in a quiet place, beautifully decorated with plants and pictures on the walls, a north facing window with a view of trees and mountains and sky.

There are two computer stations at the large desk with two screens each, large high def screens, a high speed connection with back up satellite connection, a land line phone and cell phone. A printer next to my files of favorite information I accumulate on the market to make my new desires from. A wall with a large bulletin board with current charts I am following with my notes on what I see I want to happen. There is a large drawing table with my hand drawn charts and a comfortable swivel chair that easily moves around the room.

I come into the room when ever I want, being able to trade at any hour, and any market. I see opportunity in the chart formations and act on my intuitive desire to accumulate money in my brokerage accounts. I also have a second trading room in my office in town with four computer stations with two computers and four screens each. There are three good trading associates that come in to trade with me when they want. It is a friendly atmosphere and we all are focused on the natural laws of trading, supporting each other and enjoying the fruits of a group experience of trading.

We freely share ideas and insights of the current market and future events. There is a willingness to hear new ideas and create a new direction in trading that hasn't been created before. These breakthroughs are leading edge creations into the next generation of trading experiences. Along with this group of four member traders there is an online group of 10 traders around the world that share in the events of the group at the office and bring their insights and desires to the group. All creations are brought to manifestation as they match the vibrational structure of the group and unlimited profits and pleasant joyful experiences are the result of the harmonious connection of the group."

Now because of the limited space within these pages we are not going to detail all of this desired trading experience. What I will do is take the home trading desire and fill in some of the detail and lay it out in a graphic form and see if it makes sense to you. If it doesn't, just follow the underlying structure and add your own details and create what turns you on, what lights your fire, what is the passion that gets you out of bed in the morning with a big smile on your face because you get to trade today if you want, you get to make money today if you want, and you get to be as happy as you want, because you are doing your life in sync with your natural rhythm and flow of life. You are connected to the essence of creative energy and have as well, the ability to be, do or have anything you clearly desire.

I will set a time line for this example, assuming I am starting right now as a new trader or at least a trader that desires to start a new trading experience. The first thing I need to do is be very clear what I want. I want a room with two computers and two screens per computer, and the room is in my home, quiet and has as north facing window with a view. The decorated room is pleasing to me and I have two trading accounts with $50,000 in each account.

If you are starting without a trading system, then you will need to find a friend who will help you, or find an article or book with a trading system or go online and see if you can find a system that will be a starting point for you. You can refine anything as long it is based on similar patterns as yours. If you have read Secrets of Trading and Making Money, included in the book are several complete trading systems that are easy to use, assuming they are your cup of tea, your matching energy pattern.

These trading systems are not as important as your clarity of focus toward trading profitably. You can create a beautiful statue from clay with a stick, or a fork, or a tire iron if you clearly know what you want to create. It isn't the tool; it is the clarity of mind that brings together the energy in a pattern that is sustained in a stable resident pattern to remain in manifest form in materiality. It is your use of the Law of Vibration in creating, that you can use any compatible matching vibration, any tool, and any trading system.

Let's put up current long term charts for the commodities and stocks I want to trade and I'll make decisions where I want to enter and exit based on the market doing what I anticipate it will do. I have a set of rules I trade by, including how many shares or contracts I will enter and how I take profits and limit loss. I am clear I want to follow these proven rules and that I do not want to become emotionally involved in my trading. The only emotion I want to experience is the joy of making money.

Other emotions like fear and greed, excitement of surviving a difficult experience, or any other thrill type of emotion I will create in another place and time. I am willing to go to Las Vegas if I want to gamble, not in my trading. I am willing to jump off a cliff with a bungee cord or parachute out of an airplane if I want, but not in my trading. My desire to trade for profit and pleasure is very clear to me and I am willing to do just that. The other emotions, that will create other experiences, will be created in a different time and space than my trading.

I realize that I can have anything I want if I am willing to abide the law it is operating under. If I want to drive a car safely, I open the door, get in, put the key in the ignition and turn it. The engine starts and I put it into drive and the car begins to move forward. As long as I know where I want to go and I turn the wheel to stay in sync with the road and other traffic and apply the brakes and accelerator to control my speed to accommodate this flow with the traffic system I can get to any place I want, when ever I want and know ahead of time that it all will happen just as I want. All I have to do is stay within the constraints of the system.

The same is true with trading. I go into my room and turn on the computer, find the markets I want to trade and know where I want to go. By using my entries, exit's, stops and trading signals, I can be assured of getting what I want as long as I stay within the constraints of the system. (I trade within my margin requirements and don't change my focus of wanting to be successful and profitable and I maintain this creative platform in time/space until the trade manifests in time/space.)

I will know when something is not in sync with the market, when I am not holding a compatible creative belief structure to create from, not because I am losing money but because I am feeling something other than joyful expectation, happiness, love of trading, pleasant excitement of doing what I want to do. When I am experiencing something other than these things, like I am worrying, afraid, confused, bored, angry, depressed, lost or anything like this I have changed my "belief" or "desire" vibrational base. And with this new vibrational pattern it will gather matching patterns and my creation will be similar to this new vibration, which is not what I wanted my trading to be.

It isn't an accurate gauge to measure if everything is going the way I want it go by monitoring my wins and loses. If I get anxious because I have a losing trade, I enter into an anxious emotion, a new vibrational experience and it moves me from my creative platform for successful trading. Winning and losing is how the market stays alive and moves across a chart. If the market could never go down it wouldn't be a market we could trade. Just like our breathing, if we could never breathe out, but only breathe in, we would die. The market is built to go up and down and our trading system is designed to have both winners and losers. This is a healthy design to make living easy and movement take place in an efficient and orderly way.

The way we want to monitor if our trading is doing ok, is by watching our emotional response in the moment, our feelings of ease and joyful expectation will maintain a vibrational energy that we can create from with power and obtain the results we want. When we are sitting in an energy pocket of discordant patterns, there is very little power available to match patterns to, very little opportunity to match what we want to what we are creating from. Can't grow tomatoes from carrot seeds, can't be profitable from an energy base of doubt and fear.

Let's make a graphic chart of a simple desire to create a profitable and pleasurable trading environment. Again, you find your specific hot buttons and things that turn you on and with these passionate points of focus; you wield a powerful method of crafting your desires into material experiences.

The above time line is a beginning to what you may want to include in your framework of things to maintain the desire of trading profitably over a period of time that will establish and maintain the material form in your experience. It can be as detailed as you wish and it doesn't have to be complex; in fact, "simple" is the natural way the Universe creates very efficiently, so we can too.

Keep it simple and remember that the way you make money in the market is to enter and go with the direction of movement (trend) and allow time to accumulate money (price). Take profit the way you want to take it, it is your creation and choice how you want to do it. It is a matter of time, how long you want to be in the flow of price movement over time, and as you become clear about this, the market is very agreeable to providing that movement and you are the one deciding where and when you want to play in it.

One of the problems in creating a successful trading experience is that we have a tendency to focus on what "is" and not on what we want. The present moment of reality has great importance to us; we assume it is more important than what is not present. We look at something in the present moment as real, that last bar on the chart is more important than the old ones that are past and more important than the ones we can't see yet. So we give a lot of attention to the present bar's movement.

Where we place our attention, where we focus our awareness is where the flow of energy is directed in our conscious perception. It is the place where we create. So if this creative energy is directed toward what we are perceiving in the present moment, we are not creating anything new, we are sustaining what is already created, the present bar, the present moment, and we are not able to do anything about it. We have no conscious control of bringing into our experience what we want, when we are merely maintaining what is already here.

When we focus on what we want, focus on the desire of a future manifestation in space/time, we then channel this creative energy onto the creative platform for bringing about that which we desire, the new experience. When we continually focus on what has happened and we believe it to be what is true, we re-create it over and over because that is where our attention is. Our attention is the focus of creative energy. Our attention is the creative tool we use to form that which we desire.

So to bring about that which we desire, to bring about a successful experience in trading, one that is profitable and pleasurable, we must shift our attention to that desire, to that set of vibrational patterns that make up that desire. When Michelangelo looked at the granite and saw the David, it came forth into physical reality for all of us to experience it.

When Rodin saw the Thinker, we all get to experience his creation now.

When we look at a lump of clay and see only the form of a lump of clay, we will get to experience the lump of clay, nothing new, nothing more than what is.

We have to go beyond the evidence of what already is, and see what is going to come, to see our desire evolving from the material present into our desired present. Take the clay and see what it is we want, and then the hands can form that clarity with sustained attention and adherence to natural laws. You can't form the clay into your vision of a beautiful flying eagle with outstretched wings; by throwing it in the middle of a busy highway and letting the wheels of cars form it into a new shape. The law would require a similar pattern being formed from the present pattern, and tire tread isn't similar to soaring eagle wings.

The soaring eagle wings must be formed in the mind of the sculptor first, and then with hands and shaping tools, that pattern of form is created in the spatial materiality of the clay within an appropriate time span. It comes into space/time by the rules. A trader wanting to create a new experience of trading, cannot see the present state of his trading and create anything new; he must see what he desires, the new trading experience and then allow this pattern to be held in an appropriate creative matrix in his mind, until it also forms in spatial materiality within an appropriate time period.

If one is willing to relax the idea that what is happening right now is more important than what I want to be happening, then I can focus my creative energy on that which I want to create. As long as I look at the tires running over the clay in the street, over and over, the same thing is going to be produced, a smashed piece of clay with tire marks on it.

To change the clay into something else I need to get it out of the street full of cars, and in the quiet room of my studio. I relax my desire to see what is on the table (a lump of clay) and let my mind focus on what I want to see, the eagle with outstretched wings, hovering in the air effortlessly. I can then create that desire, that image of the eagle into the clay sitting before me, because the clay in its natural form is a matching material to sculpt into any form I want.

A piece of concrete sitting before me isn't a compatible material, a compatible vibrational pattern to create from. I can't create the eagle from the block of concrete with my hands. I need to bring into my creative platform a matching pattern to sculpt the concrete. Maybe I could use a hammer and chisel or air drill, or something a lot more heavy duty than my hands and a little water. When I match the vibrational equivalent of what I want with what I am creating with, then the result will be material form in space/time.

Let's look a little more closely at what we are using to create our trading experience, our desired materialized form. In each of the first three examples we have elements of the process of creation that are already in materialized form and some elements that are yet to be materialized. In the example of climbing the mountain, we have all the elements in form ready for us to use except the physical experience of adding our physical body to the existing elements.

We are going to move our body to a place within the stable vibrational pattern we will call Mt. St. Helens, and this new addition of our physical pattern is the new creation. It is like an artist adding another handful of clay to the lump of clay we are molding into our desired form. This new handful of clay will change the old lump into a different and new form. Adding our physical presence to the mountain will change the old mountain form into something new, our creation.

This new creation may seem temporary, because we come and go and at first thought may appear that nothing will be different when we leave. Yet if we could see what effect we leave behind we may be very surprised. We leave foot prints, broken twigs, take in oxygen and change it to carbon dioxide; our sweat adds water molecules to the air, and perhaps a few dead mosquitoes on the trail.

This is just a small glimpse into what change we cause when we add our presence to the existing world we live in. It is like the story of the butterfly flapping its wings in Switzerland may be part of the cause of the landslide in South America the next year. All the effects of vibrational patterns interacting to create a new pattern that brings about the new effect. We are all connected to the same energy show that is going on here, and we are cause and the effect within it.

What we can do is start recognizing how we are a part of this amazing process and we can be any cause and have any effect we want. All we need to do is abide by the rules of matching patterns that will be sustained in space/time. A spurious pattern can be created or show up. But if it has no connection point to this system of energy, this reality, then it will not be experienced in space/time. It will come and go in an instant and not have a material basis to be sensed by our physical body's amazing energy pattern recognition system. Our mind and our five senses combining to give us a physical experience, and this is done by matching previous patterns to present ones and having a conscious awareness of what is happening, of what it is, a knowing of reality by a comparison of memory to new input.

So the mountain climbing was a subtle creation of new physical form, whereas the garden is a very easy to see, new creation in form. The fruit that is produced is new, wasn't there before we decided to have a desire and create it. In this example too, we have elements that are already in form we are using to bring about the new form. The soil is already here, the seeds are already in the packet in the store and the water is ready to come out of the hose.

Our part in the creation process, is to organize the existing elements of form into a movement of connection with energy from our focus on a desire and holding the elements in place until they produce the new pattern. The seed is held in the ground with occasional water and warm temperature and it moves into the next generational pattern of a tomato or leaf of spinach.

It is as easy as knowing if I add two and two, I get four. If I put my hand on the red hot fire I get burned. The next generational pattern will develop, a four or a charred finger tip is a given, if they are matching patterns in my Universe, in my mind. If I don't believe two and two is four, it won't add up. If I don't believe that a red hot fire will burn me, like some gurus seem to do, then the finger will not change to a charred finger tip. This matching of belief is the key to knowing what the new generational offspring of the creative effort will be.

Knowing the underlying structure that desire is being created from is how we know what is going to be the new creation, the future. If I want to know the future do I know where to look now? The future is not such a mystery as most think. It is just not understood. The process of time bringing about the new is laid in a very knowable system of rules and laws, that when we use them, they are very consistent in their effect.

As we look at building a cabin in the mountains, we again have a very tangible effect as a result of our new desire, our new creation. The cabin is not there when we begin, and at the end of the process it is there, and it remains there for some time, as long as we care for it occasionally. The elements that we used that were already in form are the materials we used to build the cabin itself.

We are like the seed in this example, because we are the energy that forms the new offspring. The individual boards, nails, rocks, wires, pipes and accessories are brought into the mixing bowl of beliefs and desires and out of it comes our idea, in a real world, material form that sticks around for a while. We have a very real awareness of our creation with our five senses in real time/space.

All three of these examples bring together existing elements, either physical or non-physical vibrational energy patterns and by connecting a new desire vibrational energy pattern, a new form is brought forth. If we look at this in the trading example perhaps we can see a little clearer what we may want to do and what we don't want to do. Our having control of events in our life depends on our choices. Without knowing what our choices are or that we are indeed making choices, we lose our guiding mechanism, our steering wheel to turn the car, our awareness of the desires that moves us into the newness of the future experience.

What are the existing elements we are using to create with in our trading experience? What are the new elements that are going to be created as we connect our desires to our creative platform? When will this process of bringing a future experience come into time and space? These are the questions we want to come to know, and when we do, we will have the pathway visible before us, with all the turns marked and the knowledge of knowing we will get there, we will climb Mt. St. Helens on September 14th, we will eat spinach from our garden in June, and tomatoes in September and we will walk into our finished cabin in the mountain next year in the fall.

This knowing is a much different experience of desiring than not knowing, than wondering if we are really going to get what we want because we are just hoping or wishing. Knowing the path and then being willing to walk it will bring us to the end we are wanting. Walking without a map, without a path to lead us, will take us into the jungle of life through all kinds of adventures we may not want to have. It is worth the time and effort to become familiar with what we are really doing here, and to decide to create consciously with this knowing.

Our trading experience we described a few pages ago, had a room with a couple of computers, a particular setting of quiet and a view of mountains and trees and a freedom of mind that allowed results to happen as we desired. By fashioning this physical environment we begin our creation, we put our foundation in to build from. Then we bring in the elements to this foundational platform in time and space and give it our focused energy to maintain its growth until the seed has sprouted out of the ground and a plant starts to form.

This trading experience as it forms into a material expression in time/space begins the same as the prior three examples, and if we can see that these first three examples are easily possible, that indeed they can be created by following the process we have been describing, then this fourth example, this trading experience, this clearly defined desire of trading and being profitable and enjoyable and freely experienced in a abundant and joyful way, will come into form just as easily, just as timely and it will be maintained in our life experience as long as we desire it.

We are the one who brings it or not. We are the one who creates the newness of our desires or allows life to default to that which is already here. We didn't come here with conscious awareness and with the power to bring to us anything we want, to just default into a preplanned storybook adventure we have read over and over. No, we are here with an ability to create, to bring into our awareness what has never been lived before, if we desire it. This is the penultimate experience we can have in this polarized sphere of duality, this life of being in less than all, but having access to all with volition.

Trading is no different than planting a seed and watching it grow into a plant that brings us fruit. It is the same as building a cabin and enjoying the process of building as well as the finished form in a beautiful setting with congruent energetic experiences from it. And trading is also the experience of climbing the mountain we may have thought we couldn't climb. It is the experience of reaching the top and lifting our arms into the high mountain air toward the sky we wanted to reach. It is the appreciation and gratitude of moving past our limitedness into our natural state of fullness and power, our joy filled excitement of living that which we can desire.

Is it possible? Do you see that what we are talking about is indeed the reality of this experience here, and you are able to do it? Without knowing what you want, or if you can do it or if you will do it, will leave the desire in a weak position for manifesting. Without clarifying the desire in great detail we limit its progress into form. Without maintaining a supportive energy structure of congruent beliefs we will undermine its ability to stay. Without feeling within our physical body the feelings of positive expectancy, appreciative gratitude, and love of life unfolding for us in our own unique way, we will be off course and not in alignment to receive what is waiting for an appropriate docking point to connect with us in our experience.

In the next chapter we will look at the elements used to create our desire for a profitable and pleasurable trading experience. Don't get too concerned about the details. Details are just the stepping stones on the pathway we want to walk, and some paths can have endless stones laid out for lifetimes of walking. The path is very simple, it only needs to point us in the right direction and walking can be done many ways.

Don't think you need to do it the right way, do it your way. You get to decide what your way is, so consider a gentle and easy way to move on this pathway of life. Life is to have fun, not necessarily spend years and years earning a time when we can retire from working, whatever that means, and start enjoying a vacation and have fun. Go ahead and have fun right now…you'll never be this "you" again, this way.

Chapter 16

Trading in Harmony with Vibrational Elements

If a thousand old beliefs
Were ruined in our march to truth
We must still march on

Stopford Brooke
1832 - 1916

This chapter is one you should write, it should be of your desires and your particular path. Nevertheless, read this example with a notion of looking for your way. If you have ideas come to you as you read, I would suggest you write them down. The mind is very good at having a great thought, a key to giving me what I am looking for, only to see myself read on and then notice I lost the key along the way. Write the key ideas down, preferably in the margins of these pages where they will remain in the context of where they came to you.

We are going to play with some thoughts about what happens in a process of creating a trading experience. First we want to start off with the most important step; we want to clarify what we want. We initially wrote this in the previous chapter, but you need to do this, you need to take the time to detail it out very definitively, very clearly as to what I want, why I want it, when I want it, where I want and anything else that needs to be said to complete its description so it can be formed. It is like the blue print we used to build the cabin. It is also the time schedule filled out in detail of when what goes where.

With this clear statement, definition, picture, or diagram of what this new desire is we can send it out to be manufactured. Say we wanted to have a new window put into our house. We would measure it, describe it and call up a window contractor to come out and put it in. All we need to do is give him enough information so it can be installed properly. As we describe our desired trading experience, we do essentially the same thing. We identify the vibrational patterns we are going to end with and as we present those to a Universe of abundant vibrational energy, we are drawing to our focused pattern, those existing patterns that are needed to connect our desired pattern to.

This drawing of like energy patterns is the nature of the universe and is done automatically when we allow it. The reason I say allow it, is because we are the mediator between the joining of existing belief patterns and new desire patterns. We say if a belief pattern is true of not, we say whether we "believe" it. Those beliefs we focus on, say are true, are the ones that will be available for our new desire to attach to. If we don't allow a congruent belief to be present, the new desire pattern has no similar attaching point, and can't connect in our reality, cannot be in our space/time dimension.

An example may be that I have a desire "to make lots of money trading now", and I have a belief "that new traders can't make money trading because it takes years and years for a trader to be able to make money". The desire to make money will have to match with the present belief structure, and because I am holding the belief that it takes years and years to make money, the only way the making money desire can come in to my experience is through this limited belief of taking years and years. So it matches with this belief and the money can only come in after years and years. It can't come in sooner because there is no matching belief that supports it coming in sooner.

Now you say, ok, I'll just change my mind and say I can make money right now. This is great, but you still have the old belief which is much older, better established and has a lot of history proving it to you. The new one is still very young and without much power, I still don't really believe it is true all the time, so there is a process of changing the underlying old beliefs for new ones, or I need to relax the old ones and only focus on the matching energy pattern that will connect with my desire.

This is the work we are doing in this chapter; this is the underlying platform we are going to create from that needs to be flexible and vast enough to include all types of creations. We need to build an efficient factory to manufacture our product, to create our desire. And so we must be clear what this process is, and be able to recognize when it's working and when it isn't.

To make a change in space and time, it will have to be made in the parameters of space and time. To make a vibrational change in space and time, the change will have to be made within the parameters of the vibrational range one desires to change. A change cannot be made if the vibrational range of the cause and effect is too far apart. There will be no connecting vibrational energy to connect the two and so they will not be able to interact.

A cause cannot create an effect unless the two are a balanced pair of energies. You cannot get ice by trying to freeze dirt. To get ice, you need water and then freeze it. Ice and water are vibrationally very similar except for the temperature difference, they are both vibrationally water, but one changes to a new state by reducing its temperature. This is very different from trying to cool the temperature of dirt down far enough that it turns into ice. Dirt and water are very different, and will not interact in the same way water and water will. You need the vibrational energy of water to make ice.

If one desires to create profit one can't do it from poverty or loss. If one wants to create a healthy life style and run the Boston Marathon, one can't do it from a place of doubt and worry. If one wants an abundant life style full of positive expectation and fulfilled desires, it can't be created from a base of scarcity and lack. One must create from the source of what one desires to come; one must allow the vibrational matrix in the mind to be a matching source for the new form to materialize from.

Newness doesn't come from nothingness; it comes from what is already in a similar vibrational pattern and materializes by being given a focused womblike environment in ones mind. It is sustained thereafter, by this same focused vibrational pattern of energy being held in consciousness and not disallowed or seen as not true. True beliefs are the sustainable energy that holds what is created and held in awareness, beliefs and fulfilled desires. They are the effects in reality from the causal matrix of a clear mind.

Let's see how this looks in relation to trading. When one has a system for trading and believes it to be a profitable system and that there is joy in trading with it and making money, then the desire is placed in the workable matrix of these energy patterns built to sustain them. If one has a system for trading and believes it to be profitable sometimes and there is a lack of trust and a fearful atmosphere exits when trading, then the energy pattern from this matrix will have less than ideal results. In fact, it is doubtful this environment would be sustained for any length of time because the matrix and the desire are incompatible. Desiring profit from a less than profitable system will not create profit.

Energy running clockwise around a circle will be able to shift to another circle and run around it because it is the same pattern. This circular energy pattern would have a harder time trying to circle around a triangle or square, it is not the same, it would not be a circle anymore and it would not be recognized as a sustainable created circle. It would be something else; it would be a loss instead of a win in a trade, or an up trend instead of a down trend in a forecast. It will not manifest the way we want it to; it will manifest the way it does according to a matching vibrational pattern it is made with.

Just like ice and water seem to be very different, they are really made out of the same thing. A circle made out of a circle may seem to be the same thing, but if one is red and one is green, or one thick and one thin they are different but the same too. The underlying pattern must be a match to allow the energy to cyclically repeat, so it is sustained in time and space and can remain as form. Without this matching matrix of vibration, the time and space version of the thought/concept can't be sustained and will not be present.

Because of the variation in circles (thick-thin, red-green, etc.) there is the possibility for a creation to evolve into a new form. The evolution of form is a gradual movement from an existing sustainable form to a similar pattern that can reside with the existing one.

There can't be a radical shift from square to circle; it is not close enough to support enough of the two in the same frame. Because they will not be in the same frame, we won't experience them at the same time/space. To bring them into the same frame requires a matching pattern, as similar framework to support their vibrational pattern in the same time and space.

Our awareness focuses on one frame at one particular time and in one particular place (space). Each element of the particular frame must be connected to a supported resident frame that is already established in awareness. To bring a new element into this frame, it must fit within the vibrational range. It must have a congruent point of attachment that allows its continued vibration to exist and be sustained in the flow of present energy. If the new element requires a different vibrational energy to sustain it in time and space, then it must reside in that sphere of vibrational flow.

So let's look at the example of I have a desire "to make lots of money trading now", and I have a belief "that new traders can't make money trading because it takes years and years for a trader to be able to make money". Because the vibrational patterns of these two thoughts are different, in fact they are opposites, they have no place to come together and allow the desire to connect to the belief.

Think about opposites; a windy and calm day, sunny day and a dark night, a lion and a lamb. It isn't possible to have them come together because when one is present the other can't be. As soon as the wind blows, the calm day is nonexistent, when the sun comes up the night is over, gone until the sun goes down again.

The lion and the lamb are not exactly opposites, they are both animals, they have similarities and so they can share a time/space environment, but there are elements of these two that are opposites, that are incompatible when it comes to connecting. The lion is a predator and the lamb is a prey. One is aggressive and one is defensive and in this area of vibrational matching, the two cannot be brought together. The predator will cease to be a predator as soon as it becomes a prey, and vice versa.

The lion and lamb coming together can happen as long as there is a different framework of vibrational compatibility, a different set of patterns than predator-prey. If the lion has just eaten, is now a lazy sleeping lion, not the predator looking for food, the lamb can join the lion as a fellow docile animal. They can come together and not have to endure the disruptive effects of opposite energies resolving back into a balanced one. This is having the lion eat the lamb.

A wind will resolve the discrepancy of the calm air by moving it; the sun will resolve the discrepancy of light and dark by making it light. This resolution of energy into a stable state that can be sustained over time and within space is how we enjoy a physical material world. If these discrepancies were to exist, this beautiful world and universe we are enjoying would become a very chaotic experience. We wouldn't be able to have a stable known framework within which we could depend on predictable outcomes from prescribed actions. We couldn't control our destiny; we would be balls bouncing randomly around in a nebulous pin ball machine.

So the example of I have a desire "to make lots of money trading now", and I have an opposite belief "that new traders can't make money trading because it takes years and years for a trader to be able to make money", will create a situation where it must be resolved back to one, to harmony within the larger system, within reality. The resolution will be back to the belief, because the desire isn't established in the system yet, in the framework of sustaining real energy. So we revert back to years and years of time needing to occur before we can make money trading.

An alternative is to use a different belief platform, a different mind set to trade with. Instead of holding the thought in our mind that trading is hard, we can hold the thought that trading is easy. Without holding the thought that trading takes a lot of time to gain experience and skill, we can hold a thought that trading is a simple activity that is available to even novice traders. But we immediately go out and find evidence that this thought isn't true, so we can't believe it and we revert back to the one that has a lot of evidence that says it takes a long time. This is how we stay stuck in old beliefs. We think we need evidence to prove it is true, and when we don't find the evidence, we can't believe it.

Do you know how electricity works? Do you have evidence of the underlying reasons that electricity should be able to turn a rotor and move a pulley, or drive a machine that makes more electricity or produce light or heat? The first person who used electricity knew much less than we do, had no evidence of its uses, but somehow decided that is was ok to believe it could do something without the evidence.

Is it possible to have a thought of something that is totally brand new, and believe it can exist and perform helpful functions in our lives? Of course, every new invention, or idea came about because someone was willing to believe it could work, it could happen even though there was no evidence to prove it was true. Running a mile under 4 minutes used to be impossible, and it was proven over and over because no one could do it. There was no evidence it was possible until one day a guy did it. Now it is done all the time, even by high school runners.

I can't trade successfully unless I spend years and years of hard work and lots of lessons from the road of hard knocks, is a belief that sets us up for a long hard journey in our trading experience. What does it really mean to be successful? What if success is entering a trade and exiting with profit? Does it take years and years to do that? No it doesn't, in fact it can't, the odds against someone trading for years and years without a single winning trade is not realistic.

We are successful, but when we place a vibrational belief structure in our trading experience that says something other than that, something to the effect we are not successful, then that belief structure will be the basis for drawing similar energy patterns and these patterns will be "not successful" patterns, we will lose in order to sustain this belief, we will spend years and years waiting to be successful because we are sustaining this "not successful" belief structure.

If we want to do something different, like we want (desire) to be successful trading before years and years have to go by; then we need to be aware of our mind set, the basis of our creativity, of our manifesting our desire into our material experience. So how can we know which belief structure is actively present in our creation frame? Sometimes we may not be aware of our present state of mind because it is usually the mind we are using to be aware of "things". For the mind to be aware of itself is not as easy as it seems. The mind can be in many different kinds of energies, many different kinds of patterns, many mind sets, and each of these different sets or frames of reference will give a unique perception of what we are focusing on.

If the mind is entering a belief structure of predator, like the lion is hungry, then it will have a much different perception of the lamb, than if the lion is full and has a docile mind set. A trader that has a mind set of fear about losing money will have a different perception of trading than one who knows he has sufficient money to allow the market to go up and down in its natural way and that it is ok to lose in order to win.

To be in the market is the only way to win and be profitable, but being in the market is also the only way to lose money. Because both are possible and probable, it is necessary to have a mind set that allows reality, allows both winning and losing to be ok without the opposite vibrational pattern of fear coming in to off set the vibrational pattern of confidence and ease. Fear is the opposite of expansion, fear contracts, and this contraction of money and profits are the result we will experience.

When we are looking to know what our present mind set is, we can look at the physical results we are obtaining right now. What is being produced from our mind set is a clear reflection of the belief structures we are holding in our mind. So if we are making profits and enjoying our trading experience, we are holding a productive and compatible mind set, and are creating our desires to be manifest. When we are not getting what we desire, when we are feeling the opposite of happiness, joy, ease, abundant effects from our trading experience, then we know we are holding an opposite belief structure, an opposing mind set to allowing what we want to come into our life.

When we recognize these opposing effects, these uncomfortable, negative feelings, we can know we need to take a look at what we are using to manifest from. When I am afraid, I don't have a platform to create profit from, when I am tired, angry, doubtful, bored, uneasy I can know that the outcome is going to be much different than when I am confident, happy and at ease with my trading. If I recognize my emotional signals telling me I'm out of sync and I don't do anything different, then I will continue to have the same unprofitable results, over and over. It must be. Only matching vibrational patterns can create and sustain form in time/space. A negative base will create a negative effect. A positive base will create a positive effect.

By consciously paying attention to what the mind is thinking and to what the body is expressing we can know how successful we are going to be in creating what we desire. We will create our desires with a positive mind set and a positive body expression of it. The body is our key to verifying if our mind is aware of its present true belief foundation, its present vibrational platform for manifesting the present desire. When desire and belief aren't matching, there is an incompatible energy present and the body will reflect this inconsistency with an emotional response, we'll feel bad. When desire and belief structures are matching we feel good.

How do you feel right now? If you feel more positive than negative, then you are more capable of manifesting new elements of your desire than if you are feeling negative. If we are feeling negative, we need to shift this to a more favorable position. Remember we can't jump from a square pattern to a circular one, we can't jump from fear to confidence, they are too far apart in structure, they won't connect, and so we need to shift in a more gradual way or to another area or part of our mind that isn't attached to all this negative vibration. If we are trading and find our self mired down in fearful and confusing thoughts, it is good to get up and walk away, go to another activity, to clear the mind. Listen to some music, talk to someone about pleasant things, go for a walk or run, get some exercise and let the body get connected to the mind again in a positive way.

This approach of shifting to another frame of mind is usually very effective if you pay attention to the new experience, but if you go for a walk and keep thinking about what you were thinking about previously, then nothing is going to shift, we will stay in the old stuff. Go on the walk and smell the flowers, see the trees or people passing by, feel your feet walking on the ground and your heart beating in your chest. Let the mind go to another more neutral place and then start looking again at the trading experience, but do it slowly, and only let the mind believe what you want it to believe.

I don't have to believe that it takes year's to trade successfully, I don't have to believe that a losing trade is going to kill me, or that losing isn't ok, or that a market going in the opposite direction than what I think is a bad thing. It is a good thing to know where the market is going, and to let go of my thoughts that think something else. It is a wonderful thing to be in sync with reality, with the market, and know that what it is doing is prefect and that I can now see it clearly. If I hold to an old thought that wants it to go the other direction, then I am out of sync and can't trade the market. I can't trade successfully until I get back into sync with what it is really doing.

What are vibrational patterns that support profitable trading? Making a list of my current beliefs about trading, about making money, about accumulating abundance, about enjoying my trading experience will tell me if I am ready to trade and make money. If I don't believe with a passion of positive expectation and excitement, with an anticipation of eager willingness to fully embrace my desire of trading and support myself with appropriate belief structures and positive, enjoyable physical bodily emotions and feelings, then I will lack the basis to be successful. I can determine quite easily a path to successful trading when I prepare my creative belief platform with matching positive beliefs to my desire for profit and pleasure.

So let's review what these vibrational elements are that determine the manifestation of new desire. First is the clarifying of what the desire is; placed in specific detail and in written or symbolic form that will be a permanent reminder. It must be available to our awareness on a frequent and regular basis, so the willingness to keep it in mind, focus our attention on it with an appropriate supporting structure or matching beliefs, and vibrational energy patterns so that the new desire, the new vibrational energy pattern can manifest and be supported by the attendant existing belief structure.

Then maintain the new elements of the manifestation with frequent attention of focused awareness, holding the thought in the proper mind set as it develops in time and spatial qualities. As this new desire pattern is maintained it becomes a new belief structure capable of supporting further manifestations of similar form.

Creating a time line of when this new desire is to be experienced will focus our attention to a specific point in time and create an attachment anchor for it to connect with. As it connects to our foundational belief structure, it comes into time/space to be experienced physically. As it is maintained it remains a part of the physical reality and is available for us to create additional elements for our experience.

Remember this little diagram relating desire and belief to time? Our time line for manifesting new form brings desire from the future to the present to be experienced then it passes into the past for our use as a belief structure.

All creation is maintained in the past, because without a past you have nothing to project into the future that will match existing form. The past has the existing patterns that have been aligned into a balanced sustaining system for our perception of space/time and material form. This Universe of stable vibrational patterns are the basis for our material reality as it expands with new desires becoming stable beliefs that are supported by the other stable vibrational patterns. So these recurring belief structures are nested in time and provide an energy matrix structure that we perceive as the world around us. Without these resident beliefs, we would not be aware and know materiality and space/time as we do. We would not be able to realize a polarized duality, a life experience in time and space.

Let's make a simple graphic of what we have been talking about, and use it as a guide in monitoring where we are in the manifesting cycle.

This graphic is a very simplistic form of steps one may take in paying attention to what is happening within the creative process of manifesting desire into belief. How one chooses to do this is an independent activity and can be accomplished many ways. There is not just one way everything has to be done. There is an unlimited opportunity for each of us to manifest in any way we choose. The only requirement is that it matches the environment we bring the form into, and in this universe we are in a vibrationally based system that has a pattern matching-sustaining process that enables our perception of space/time to function.

If we vary from this underlying process, the perceptual elements will not be present and we will not have the experience of time/space materiality holding form for us to experience. We will not be able to perceive it in this realty and we will not be able to control the ability to create what we want.

If I want to trade and make money I can only do it in the framework of a successful alignment of events that create it. If I am creating from an energy base that is not congruent with making money, or being successful, then the output from the experience will be made of the input material. What goes into a recipe determines what will come out. The effort expended in a trading experience will only yield what the effort contains. It doesn't matter how hard I try to be successful, if I am doing something that is not bringing me success. I can push against a concrete wall all day with all the strength I have, but I won't get to the other side until I realize I need to open a door and go through it.

Two thousand birds flying in the wrong direction doesn't make it right. It has to match the underlying thing I want; it has to be the same as my desire. The underlying vibrational patterns must be similar enough to facilitate a connection into the space/time framework and this must be maintained with a focused attention and desire to maintain it as a true belief.

Chapter 17

Trading in a Matrix

The important thing is not to stop questioning.
Curiosity has its own reason for existing
One cannot help but be in awe
When he contemplates
The mysteries of eternity,
Of life,
Of the marvelous structure
Of reality

Albert Einstein
1879 – 1955

In looking at vibration as structure, we are using a materially generated concept. A reality based focus of specific vibrations to define vibrations. It is like using a duck to say it is a duck. But we are in a vibrational based universe and all we have available to define with is our present vibrations. But we can look at the variation in vibrations and see how they are different, how they interact or don't interact and it gives us a basis for knowing; for using them in a way that it brings about a desired end.

Since everything is vibration, and what we are communicating with is vibration, it is important to understand what we are doing when this interaction takes place. What is the outcome of entertaining a vibration in the mind? When we put nitric acid, sulfuric acid and glycerin together, it would be good to know we may want to be careful with our little concoction. When we put together a concoction of words and let them reside in our mind, we get a resultant effect in the body. We just don't want to create too many explosions; it seems to have an aging or harmful effect over time.

Even just combining certain words, without the physical material (form) being utilized can cause a substantial experience for us physically. For example; if a judge just found you guilty of some crime and says you are going to face a firing squad and be shot at noon today, you may notice a vibrational experience from just entertaining the words you just heard. Nothing has happened yet in the real world of being shot, but that combination of vibrational patterns in your mind will create a response.

Words, numbers, symbols, thoughts, concepts, stories, things-real and not real; all have a generating capacity for creating a new vibrational entity or experience for us. Knowing that we can be aware of this, and have a choice as to which we desire to play with or not, will give our life a potential for controlling or guiding it in a way that matches our desires. Knowing that what we speak has an effect, what we see, hear, taste, touch or allow to come into connection with will have an effect and we may want to consciously determine how this happens.

If I know a word is going to vibrationally change my experience, I may want to not say it or hear it. If I get an effect from seeing certain scenes, I may want to have more, or if I don't like it, not have any at all. This conscious choice of determining input, can bring us a more friendly experience, than just being bombarded with random input and having the result.

Looking at just the structure of the word itself can give us clues to what the vibrational nature of it may have for us when we combine it with our vibrational platform in the moment. Let's look at two words we are familiar with in the business of trading. One is trading and the other is gambling.

What is trading? The word, from its roots in Middle English, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, Old Saxon (trada) means course, path or track and from Old High German (trata) it is akin to tread. So the roots of the word suggest a defined course of direction, and the verb trading would imply the following of this course of direction. After centuries of use the roots of the word may be somewhat hidden in modern usage and because the sound of the word has evolved also the meaning has shifted somewhat.

Sound is vibration; and words are vibration with a specific identifying signature (graphical and mathematical). Trada or trata has moved to trade; definitely a different sound, visual graphic and mathematical number. So the vibration of trade is different from the roots. Vibration in the market is the key to identifying its nature and thus its movement. Vibration in my nature is the key to identifying my nature and my movement. Vibration of trading is the key to identifying its nature and movement.

When we recognize something; to re-cognize = to think it again, this means we are seeing it, at least for the second time. Something seen for the first time can't be recognized. So to know something or to give something meaning there must be this act of comparing what is new to what is old (memory). Then we can say, "Oh yes, I know that, I remember that!" The meaning we give something is from the comparison of what I already know with what I want to know. So when I combine my truth to my unknown; if it fits, the unknown then moves into my truth, my known (knowledge). What is my meaning of trade, trader, trading? It is a unique definition for each of us and it is crucial if we are to be successful in the business of trading, that the foundation be solid. So let's look at the definition of trading.

Trade: the act or process of buying, selling or exchanging commodities… ; a purchase or sale; an occupation pursued as a business or livelihood; market; the customers; an exchange of items; to traffic; shop or make purchases, buy; business, barter, dealing, selling.

Gambling: comes from the Middle English word gamemen to play, Old English gamemenian. The word game: comes from Old High German gaman = glee
So we have gamble coming from the word glee which is based in an emotional experience.

The original definition of trading is of a path or way of doing business, has no emotional element at all, merely a course or path that leads to something. This type of event is direct and knowable whereas if one makes it a game (gamble) it is based on emotion which is not connected to a known result but the exact opposite; an unknown experience creates emotion. True trading would involve no emotion and if one is experiencing emotion it is a clear indication that the path or course is not known and it is gambling.

So these two words are very different yet some people would use them as interchangeable. It is like mixing ingredients to make a cake and saying that nitroglycerin and sugar is the same thing. Of course we know they aren't, but to someone thinking they are because they haven't had any experience with them, they may be eating cake off the ceiling. For a trader to entertain the thought that trading and gambling are very similar and maybe the same thing, will have a different experience than a person who knows they are very different and they never allow the two to become connected in the process of trading.

When we put words together, they create a unique vibrational pattern and as a result create a unique experience. Not only do we need to be aware of volatile words but volatile combinations of innocent words. Let's look at some examples..

Hold the thought (1) "I trust my system" (2) "I follow my rules", (3) "I am willing to accept loss as part of the natural process of trading", (4) " If I wait a little longer it
