will turn around", (5) I think this situation is different so I should trade differently", (6) "I'm going to get killed in this trade".

Learn to pay attention to the thoughts that come into your awareness while trading and see if you attach to them and hold them longer than 3 seconds. You can hold a hot potato for a second or so before it burns you. You can observe passing thoughts for a passing moment but if you grab it, you will start to experience the effects of the thought.

The most common thought that moves one to action is "this isn't ok". The movement from this thought is to go in the opposite direction and usually quite quickly. In some instances this is a very good thing. Like this tiger coming at me isn't ok, or being in this burning house isn't ok. So going the opposite direction would be to get away from the tiger, get out of the burning house.

Being in a trade when this thought happens can be good or bad. It may be a false thought that isn't based in truth, but to figure that out while in the thought is a very challenging thing to do. You can only think one thought at a time, so you would need to let go of the thought "it's not ok' to look at other thoughts to see if it was true. But letting go of "it's not ok" is hard because you feel threatened, and you would have a more difficult time seeing the truth in this situation.

What is more effective is to have a set of truthful reactions to this thought "it's not ok" already handy so you can use them when you are caught in it. These reactions are called my rules for trading and they are proven and known to be true from past experience, so you can let go of "it isn't ok" and trust in the proven thoughts (rules).

Confusion is the biggest reason for making mistakes in trading and confusion comes from having a choice between at least two thoughts. If you only have one way to go, you can't get confused. As soon as you have a choice, you can be confused, hesitate, worry, stress, or be afraid. When in doubt, get out of confusion and get back to a proven way (one way). Use rules if you can, trust them and you never have to be confused worried, stressed, afraid or in any constricting emotion.

Words are vibration, thoughts are vibration, desires, beliefs, fears, and worries are all vibrations. So when we combine these words, thoughts, i.e. vibrations, we are mixing an outcome in our reality, we are creating a manifestation to be present in our awareness; we are laying the foundation for the future. All of this is done with our mind, it is the matrix we are assembling the pieces of this universe we call home.

Want to have the wish of your heart? Then straighten up the place in our mind where it will be made. Paying attention to our thoughts and particularly to how our beliefs are matching our desires is the key to the law of vibration. Want to be successful in trading? Then what is this want being made of? Where in your mind is the place it can reside and sustain itself as a reality, as a real manifestation in form, as an experience that you have in the physical?

We have all the materials we need to build with available to us, they are instantly assembled when the matching vibrational patterns come together. The Law of Vibration is a natural process of aligning energy into form in space/time and we call it reality. Trading in this matrix, in our fertile mind is the key to creating the outcome we desire.

How can we create a successful trading experience by using the Law of Vibration? Once we understand that all things are created naturally with this law, it is easy to move to the place where we can see our own creation of successfully trading and accumulating wealth, success, power, fame, enjoyment or anything we desire from trading. Trading is a pathway; we choose where it is, how we will walk it, when we walk it and how much we will walk it. It is our creation of a journey and we can decide what the itinerary will be.

As has been mentioned many times in this book, we are responsible for planning our journey. Now we know how to do it in accordance with a simple natural creation process, this law that has been working for eons in nature and by our selves (though usually unknown to us). Knowingly using this matching of energy patterns will bring us everything we are clearly desiring and believing we can have. One step at a time in the direction we want to go will always get us there. Time is the only factor we need to be patient with.

Chapter 18

The Holy Grail Of Trading

All the mistakes I make Arise from forsaking
My own station
And trying to see the object
From another person's Point of view

Ralph Waldo Emerson

The idea of hidden knowledge and the possibility of finding it after a long and arduous search is the content of the legend of the Holy Grail. Traders have for years and years talked about finding the Holy Grail of trading and with it comes the mystique of having unlimited access to all the money one would want, all the fame and glory of being the most gifted trader on the planet. Of course, we haven't seen it yet, or seen anyone else who has it, but the possibility is very intriguing.

Let's venture into a discussion about this notion of the Holy Grail for trading and how it might be seen in conjunction with the Law of Vibration we are talking about in this book. Is there a connection and will it help us more clearly discern what this illusive magical formula to life may be?

The Quest for the Holy Grail is somewhat of a paradox. On the one hand there is the desire to find the treasure and use it as the reward for the effort. On the other hand there is the journey: though called long and arduous, is quite rewarding in its own right, because isn't it true that when you do get the reward wouldn't you have to start a new journey of sorts to use it.

So life may be seen as the journey not the reward. If this is so, then when one is enjoying the long and arduous search, they may be inclined to not have it end, but to continue searching. Can't know if when I find the Holy Grail it will be any better than what I'm enjoying right now. Sound a little confusing? (*See Appendix C 1.19)

Here's a quote by Joseph Campbell who wrote extensively about the Hero's Journey, the Quest for the Holy Grail, and in fact his life seemed to reflect this as his passion, but at the end of his life he said this: "He, who thinks he knows, doesn't know. He, who knows he doesn't know, knows." I don't know what Joe was talking about for sure, I can speculate but that's not what I'm getting at here, what I think is important is the difference between knowing and awareness.

Knowing can be called thinking and is the process of the mind using the comparative information stored in the synaptic loops of the brain as a matrix to lay the incoming information on, to create a knowing, a comparative matching of the old with the new. We call this knowledge.

Awareness requires no past, but only the translating mechanism of our physical senses (sight, hearing, touch, taste, and smelling) and/or the observation of energy with the mind without this underlying matrix of past information mixing with it. Awareness in its unmodified form is different than knowledge. Knowledge requires a comparative matrix of experience whereas pure awareness or the journey requires only what is happening in the moment.

Knowledge is a manufactured viewpoint within the mind and so is an individual expression of awareness. When this unique, individual knowledge becomes hidden from the public view, is given special magical attributes, it becomes a valuable commodity in the realm of sought after desires. It elevates itself to a position of something superior to what the average person has access to, which is false. Everyone has access to everything as equally as any one else. Here are some quotes from Ouspensky about this concept of hidden knowledge.

Quotes from Ouspensky related to the idea of a Holy Grail... (A New Model of the Universe, pp. 11-14)

"The idea of a knowledge which surpasses all ordinary human knowledge, and is inaccessible to ordinary people, but which exists somewhere and belongs to somebody, permeates the whole history of the thought of mankind from the most remote periods. ...

"`Hidden knowledge' is therefore sometimes called `ancient knowledge.' But of course this does not explain anything. It must, however, be noted that all religions, all myths, all beliefs, all popular heroic legends of all peoples and all countries are based on the recognition of the existence sometime and somewhere of a knowledge far superior to the knowledge which we possess or can possess. And to a considerable degree the content of all religions and myths consists of symbolic forms which represent attempts to transmit the idea of this hidden knowledge. ...

"The Holy Grail, the cup from which Christ drank (or the platter from which Christ ate) at the Last Supper and in which Joseph of Arimathea collected Christ's blood, was according to a mediaeval legend brought to England. To those who saw it the Grail gave immortality and eternal youth. But it had to be guarded only by people perfectly pure in heart. If anyone approached it who was not pure enough, the Grail disappeared. On this followed the legend of the quest of the Holy Grail by chaste knights. Only the three knights of King Arthur succeeded in seeing the Grail."

"Many tales and myths, those of the Golden Fleece, the Fire-Bird (of Russian folklore), Aladdin's lamp, and those about secret riches and treasures guarded by dragons or other monsters, serve to express the relation of man to hidden knowledge. The `philosopher's stone' of alchemists also symbolized hidden knowledge.

"All views on life are divided into two categories on this point. There are conceptions of the world which are entirely based on the idea that we live in a house in which there is some secret, some buried treasure, some hidden store of precious things, which somebody at some time may find and which occasionally has in fact been found. And then from this point of view, the whole aim and the whole meaning of life consist in the search for this treasure, because without it all the rest has no value. And there are other theories and systems in which there is no idea of `treasure-trove,' for which all alike is visible and clear, or all alike invisible and obscure."

Joseph Campbell, in his PBS show "Power of the Myth", talks about the Holy Grail and how two knights met to fight with lances. The one represents the spiritual realm and other the natural and the grail is written on the tip of the lance from the natural earthly knight. Meaning; to get the grail, you don't look for it from above but it is all ready within your grasp, it is within. What is this propensity we have for looking externally from our self for the keys to unlocking our power from within? Is it that we enjoy the journey, this quest of seeking to find, and if we went inside we would realize our journey would come to an end?

Is our trading experience one of seeking a path on this external journey, and we spend our time in the pursuit of that which we say we desire, knowing that if we find it, we would have to re-evaluate what we really want from our trading experience? This is again the importance of clarifying what we really want and are we willing to continue to say yes to it and obtain it? That once we obtain it, we then allow a fuller expression of our desire to blossom into a richer experience than we could first imagine at the beginning.

Even along the way, we will find interesting occurrences that are surprises and they in turn lead to more and more. This idea that reaching the desire will be an end is somewhat misleading when we allow our self to be open to all the possibilities of our creation in its gestation and growth to completion. Each stage of development brings with it a new element and this becomes an experience we couldn't have had without the journey.

So what are we looking for? Are we looking outside of our self and what that will bring? Is it what we want? If we are looking for profits and pleasure in trading, our searching for the Holy Grail is a different desire. Just be clear what it is we are wanting.

You can build a house out of many things, like the three little pigs did; one of straw, wood and brick. Some houses will be stronger than others and will be for different purposes, not necessarily to keep the big bad wolf out. When we consider seeking the Holy Grail, what do we want it for? What will we do with it after we get it? Like mentioned earlier, when we get what we want, does our journey end or do we start another one? The quest for the Holy Grail is the journey, life is the journey, and seeking an end is not what life is about.

Seeking is life, so the journey to find a Holy Grail, can be a valid experience in our trading adventure if that is what we want. So what do we want? This is the clarifying of the desire stage of the Law of Vibration. We can't manifest clearly without clarity, we can't manifest in detail without detail, we can't manifest in space and time without space and time. We will receive what we give, only it will be in a more developed form. So in entering into the desire of finding the Holy Grail of trading, we first need to define it and then establish within our belief structures the supporting framework to maintain our manifested Holy Grail.

Going out and looking for the Holy Grail is a vast undertaking. Many people have created their own version of the Holy Grail and if we are looking for this perfect Holy Grail outside of our self, then we are in for a long journey. If we can't define what it is, how are we gong to know it when we find it? So defining what the Holy Grail is, with detail, in terms of present space/time definitions, will begin the process of manifesting it. We can't find it. We can't find something we don't know. We must create it and then we can have it.

We have the means of "simply" creating anything we want, if we are willing to get in sync with creative energy, which is the vibrational energy of a clear desire matched to a foundational anchor in space/time vibrational energy. If one really wants a Holy Grail, then let's get it, and we don't need to spend years or lifetimes looking for it. We only need to say what it is we want, what is the clear desire for a Holy Grail.

Here is another way to look at this elusive quest for the key to unlocking the Universe. Is it necessary to scientifically prove that everything must meet the requirements of mathematical perfection and scientific scrutiny? It should be apparent by now that this simple external equation, law or universal explanation for everything hasn't been found; even with the greatest minds searching for millennia. Is it possible, just possible, that this elusive magical mathematically correct explanation is in fact not mathematically correct? That the pursuit of something that isn't, will be a never ending journey, teasing man to look but not find.

Everyone has heard the old definition of insanity; "someone doing the same thing over and over and expecting a different result is insane". Has man been so intent on accounting for every tree that the forest isn't seen? Could it be time to look a little differently and stand back without a need for a tree count and see the beauty and magnificence of the living forest, constantly changing, growing and moving; not confined to simple law, equation or definition. Not a perfect note but the moving sound of music, so magnificent it isn't stopped to satisfy mans curiosity for knowing but allowed to fill the eager awareness of all.

What if the movement of divine mystery is a harmonic balance instead of a mathematical perfection; a harmonic balance if you will that could be experienced as a never ending movement of parts; opposites of interrelated creation in a dance of balance; tension and release, light and dark, polarity playing in the matrix of unlimited possibility.

To confine the movement to a mathematical perfection may be possible, I don't know and apparently no one else does either. So the quest can continue and provide the sublime dance of looking, but what seems to be reflected in this reality is that numbers just don't add up. The cycles of planets are off just a little, musical intervals just don't come out right; Pythagoras had to fudge a little with his comma so did Didymus (syntonic). Planck had to add a little here and there, just wasn't quite working out.

Instead of demanding artificial perfection based on man's created scientific laws could it be possible there is a simpler way of knowing? To hold only a single thread in a rope of many would severely limit the strength of ones grasp of the whole, one tree as opposed to the forest. Hearing the music is enough to know it is beautiful and perfect without dissecting it into parts and putting it back together with the thought of gaining some advantage; some advantage of knowing more when the process is over.

This may be the chosen path which is as sublime and innocent as any other, just may need to remember my way back out of the trees to remember the forest I'm in.

Here is an anonymous quote of how to consistently make profits. This could be called this person's Holy Grail if you will, and if it brings to him these profits, it is indeed what he says. It may be different than a mysterious formula from an esoteric source, with hidden meaning only revealed after many years of hard work and diligent effort. It is different from the ancient tales of cups, and knights, and adventures of peril and danger risking life and limb for that which is esteemed above all. There are many possibilities for what a Holy Grail could be; perhaps this one has some insights to some of the inner dimensions one may look for?

"All traders who consistently make profits do so because they learned to persist in the face of adversity until they win. The ability to possess a tenacious persistence requires well-founded empowering beliefs, a strong feeling of faith, confidence originating from faith but based on abilities and a well-disciplined mind that promotes a strong feeling of courage, which allows you to trust your intuition. You can constantly improve your level of performance in everything by remembering how really important this is." Anon

Can you clearly state your Holy Grail, with detail and precision? Can you have the matching beliefs that allow it to be anchored in your present experience and then can you maintain this new creation for sufficient time to allow it to establish itself as a foundational structure for additional desires to be created from. If you can, you have what you are looking for; you have something that is much more valuable than any ancient secret hidden for eons by some other person who called it their Holy Grail.

The Holy Grail we are looking for is our own; it is the one that will effortlessly give us the realization of our desires, no matter what they are. It is our connection to the rest of our being that holds the means of bringing a fulfillment of joy and abundant freedom in the expression and experience of our life. A guiding force within us that allows desire to manifest consciously.

Numbers

Pi is a very clever number. It is a key to understanding what we have a hard time understanding. Usually we see only one side of anything. A car passes by and we see the side facing us but can't see the other side. We believe we are in duality but never get to see it; only in symbolic form. All real form we perceive shows us only one side.

There are two kinds of numbers, real and imaginary, whole and complex, rational and irrational. We give them many names but there are basically numbers we can hold in our hand so to speak, and numbers we can't grab a hold of. An integer like 3 has a finite definition, it is 3. A number like sq. rt. of 3 has no perceivable end; it keeps going and going and going (pink bunny numbers). But the clever composite within some numbers lets us perceive more than one.

Pi is 3.14……, or 22/7 or several other symbols, but each of these has an equivalent similarity of possessing a number we can hold in our hand and a number we can't. Before the decimal point is a 3, a whole definite integer. After the decimal point is an infinite number. 3.14159265358979323846…or 22/7 = 3 1/7 = 3.142857142857…

So here we have a glimpse of the boundary between infinite and definite, between heaven and earth, linear and curvilinear, circle and square. To our perception we understand time as moving. Time doesn't stand still. Form stands still. So here again is our dichotomy, form is the integer number on the left side of the decimal and time is the moving endless flow of numbers on the right. The cohesive glue that holds this space/time universe together is revealed in the clever symbols of sacred geometry. Pi, Phi, Sq. Roots., etc

Zero

One of the challenges of using a 2 dimensional (linear construct) in representational graphics is the problem of zero. In a linear scale, zero has one value, the mid point of positive and negative numbers. Since the flat 2D chart used in representing the financial markets limits the value of zero to this definition, the actual movement in 3D is not represented accurately. Zero is what may be called null or void or without number, a construct before/after numbers that numbers come from and go to but cannot retain a value when in zero. In linear form it is easy to see; in 3D the seeing becomes more complex.

If one has a line, where is zero? It has infinite possibilities because it can be any arbitrary point on the line where positive numbers increase from it and negative numbers increase from it in the opposite direction. Zero is the beginning point, but a point has no 2D existence, there must be another point to create 2D, so zero becomes a creation point with no (2D) value that numbers come from.

The circle is a 2D form and a sphere is 3D. Where is zero on a circle? Is it an arbitrary point on the curvilinear line, perhaps as represented on a zodiac? Where is the zero on a sphere? Is our mathematical construct such that it allows arbitrary and infinite possibility? How would this work in determining a specific objective; i.e. the trajectory of a body through space (3D) or the movement of market action in real time? Acquiring a working knowledge of how numbers respond in a predictable manner give us the ability to use them in a predictable manner.

Another way to look at zero is to see that it is the midpoint of 1 and -1. But when we look at both of these numbers and how zero fits between them a peculiar thing happens. First let's look at +1. We see that to the right of the whole number one, numbers increase to infinity. As we look at numbers to the left of the +1 we find numbers becoming spatially smaller as the fraction or decimal becomes larger. It is an inverted position of the numbers that go to the right. These numbers that go to the left of +1 go to infinity also as they approach zero but never reach it.

When we look at -1 we find the same thing happens. Whole negative numbers to the left of the -1 increase numerically and go to infinity and the negative fractions to the right of -1 become smaller as they approach infinity and never reach zero. Zero is a number that is not connected to the other numbers but is the mirror image point for positive and negative numbers.

Appendix B

NDE

In this exploration of the Law of Vibration I have included a piece of writing I received recently in an e-mail, I don't remember who sent it to me or who wrote it. It is one of those things that comes into ones life and it seems to make sense at some time or other and it really isn't important how it gets here or all the details about it, just that it may have a gift to give in this moment and all one has to do is receive it.

This is an interview with a person that had a Near Death Experience (NDE) and she talks about how it changed her life. I felt it had some relevance to our discussion about the Law of Vibration and you can see if it has a gift for you. Everything we come upon in our life, external to our self, must be brought inside and accepted as part of us before we will make it useful in our experience.

Most people don't bring in thoughts about UFO's as real and so they aren't found in their experience. The same can be true of beliefs about anything, from political viewpoints, religious views, concepts about food, fun, passion, pleasure, fears, worries, etc. All these are possible candidates to come into our mind and find a place of residence to add to our experience if we choose. If we don't allow them space, they aren't a part of our conscious reality and we focus on other things that are. Looking at NDE's can be a possibility of new information or not, we each get to say. I think you will find this chapter interesting and see how it ties in to the things we are talking about in this book.

Excerpts from an anonymous e-mail article:

"I was drifting in and out of consciousness during this time and I could feel my spirit actually leaving my body. Then I actually "crossed over" to another dimension, where I was engulfed in a total feeling of love. I also experienced extreme clarity of why I had the cancer, why I had come into this life in the first place, what role everyone in my family played in my life in the grand scheme of things, and generally how life works. I realized what a gift life was, and that I was surrounded by loving spiritual beings, which were always around me even when I did not know it.

The amount of love I felt was overwhelming and from this perspective, I knew how powerful I am and saw the amazing possibilities we as humans are capable of achieving during a physical life.

I was shown how illnesses start on an energetic level before they become physical. I was "Shown" that everything going on in life was dependant on this energy around us, created by us. Nothing was solid – we created our surroundings, our conditions, etc. depending where this "energy" was at. The clarity I received around how we get what we do was phenomenal! It's all about where we are energetically.

I know that miracles are possible in your life every day. After what I have seen, I realize that absolutely anything is possible, and that we did not come here to suffer. Life is supposed to be great and we are very, very loved.

What emotions did you feel during the experience?

Felt tremendous love, more than anything I have experienced on earth. I felt very loved, like no matter what I did, I would still be loved. I did not have to do anything to deserve it or prove myself.

I understood that life is a gift, but we don't realize it. I understood that we are very, very loved, no matter what. I realized we create our own heaven or hell on earth, and I learned the key ingredients for creating my own heaven on earth!

When I am alone, I often get the awareness of being surrounded by beings (the same beings I felt when I crossed over, and being very, very loved – that same feeling I got during the NDE.

That made me realize that nothing is solid (or real), we can change anything. The second thing, even more impacting, is how my body went from being almost dead from cancer to totally healthy without a trace of illness in such a short time! It only makes me feel that everything (including cancer) is not real (a shift in consciousness made it disappear!) but it also makes me feel very powerful, and I have a totally different understanding of life now.

I feel very "connected" in a way I never have been before, sort of "guided". I don't feel afraid of anything anymore. I know I won't die until I complete everything I came here to do. And even then I am not afraid of death. Many, many more "coincidences" have been occurring in my life since the experience (hence the "guided" feeling.)

I still don't believe in any particular religion; however this has strengthened my belief in spirituality, and my faith in the after life, and the power of our own higher self (soul).

What I felt was that all possibilities exist simultaneously – it just depends which one you choose. Sort of like being in an elevator, where all the floors of a building exist, but you can choose which floor to get off on.

I know now that a lot more exists than we are consciously aware of or capable of understanding. Each day, I understand more and more since the NDE. I am finding out that there are things I now feel I "know" or "understand", which I never did before. The best example I can think of is: imagine there is a huge warehouse which is dark, and you live in this warehouse with one flashlight. Everything you know about this warehouse is seen through the light of this one small flashlight. Whenever you want to look for something you may or may not find it, but it does not mean the thing does not exist. It is there, but you just haven't flashed your light on it. You can only see what your light is focused on.

Then one day, someone flicks on a light switch, and for the first time, you can see the whole warehouse. The vastness of it is almost overwhelming, you can't see all the way to the end and you know there is more than you can see. But you do see how the products are lined up on all the shelves, and you notice just how many different things there are in the warehouse which you never noticed, never even conceived having existed, yet they do, simultaneously with the things you know existed (those are the things your flashlight had been able to find.) Then, even when the light switch goes back off nothing can take away the understanding and clarity of your experience. Even though you are back to one flashlight, you now know how to look for things.

I saw all people as "energy" and depending where our energy level was, that was the world we created for ourselves. The understanding I gained from this was that if cancer was not in our "energy" then it was not in our reality. If feeling good about ourselves was in our energy, then our reality would be positive. If cancer was in our energy, then even if we eradicated it with modern medicine, it would soon come back. But if we cleared it from our energy, the physical body would soon follow. None of us are as "real" or physical as we think we are. From what I saw, it looked like we are energy first, and physical is only a result of expressing our energy. And we can change our physical reality if we change our energy.

Some people have mentioned I use the term "vibration". For me, personally, I was made to feel that in order to keep my energy/vibration level up. I only had to live in the moment, enjoy every moment of life, and use each moment to elevate the next moment (which then elevates my future). It is in that moment of elevating your energy level that you can change your future (like my test results).

When I was in the NDE state it felt like I had woken up to a different reality. It felt like I had awoken from the "illusion" of life and from that perspective it looked like my physical life was just a culmination of my thoughts and beliefs up to that point. It felt like the whole world was just a culmination of the thoughts and beliefs of the collective. That is, the culmination of everyone's thoughts and beliefs. It felt like nothing was actually real, but we make it real with our beliefs. I understood that even my cancer was not real, it was also part of the illusion, and so if I went back to my body, I would not have the cancer any more.

And another thing is that there was this incredible understanding of how we are all interconnected. And how what I felt within me affects my whole universe. I felt one with everything. I felt a connection with everything. And it felt like the whole universe is within me. As far as I am concerned, if I am happy, the universe is happy. If I love myself, everyone else will love me. If I am at peace, the whole universe is peaceful, and so on.

In view of what physically happened to me, I am no longer able to see a physical disability in the same light anymore! Where in my own mind would I draw the line between what is "fixable" or "curable" and what is not? By what scale or logic would I draw these conclusions from? Certainly not from what is "medically" possible! I can't apply that to my life anymore. The word "impossible" has no meaning to me anymore. The boundaries of what is possible, or not, is very shady to me.

I look at everything in our reality, including things like illness and aging differently. I challenge anything that is considered "natural" or "normal". To me now, everything feels like human construct – that is, just another product of personal and mass belief.

Having had the experience I have, it feels like nothing is real, but every single possibility exists. I now live my life knowing that I can create my own reality based on these new truths that I have learned.

Now move forward to my NDE. This state caused a huge internal consciousness shift within me. It felt as if I had penetrated into a reality beyond my "mind" and that living in the mind was living in the "illusion". Words aren't adequate to describe the state but it felt like we constructed this world with our mind and that was the illusion.

It felt like I went beyond that and there was a feeling of being connected to the entire universe – becoming one with everyone and everything. I was also flooded in an all encompassing, unconditionally loving energy. It was an energy of unconditional love – an energy that does not discriminate or judge. This universal energy is there for us no matter who or what we are. I felt amazingly powerful and magnificent.

NOTHING outside of myself could kill me. NOTHING. Just like that I was presented with the choice and that I had made the decision, made it real. And as soon as I made the decision, every single cell in my body responded to that decision, and I healed almost immediately.

The NDE gave me that last "push" that I needed to see beyond this reality and once I saw that the body is not the real me, and that the cancer was also not "real" I was then able to see how loved I am, and I recognized my own magnificence and once I made the decision to live, the physical body only reflected this "new found" state.

I made the decision to come back when I realized that "heaven" is not a place but a state. I believe that once people are willing to expand their minds to let in such occurrences into their own reality, it may even trigger further inner work to allow for such a shift to happen within them, I don't believe everyone has to have something as dramatic as an NDE to see such miracles occur, perhaps just a willingness to let go of beliefs which may be holding them back.

From that state where this life looked like an "illusion" created by collective minds and beliefs, it looked like our strong attachments to certain beliefs are what hold the illusion in place. Perhaps a willingness to look at and let go of beliefs that may be holding us back could help us to move forward faster as a collective consciousness (perhaps a better term would be "collective unconsciousness" – because we humans do this without awareness).

From the perspective of the other dimension it really felt like nothing is real, only our beliefs about them make them so. Now knowing that, I review what I believe and only hold on to what serves to expand my life and let go of anything that feels restricting or doesn't make me feel positive.

I feel that once you start believing that something is possible, you start to let it into your awareness and then it starts to become true for you. The more you believe it, the more it starts to become real for you. This is why it is so very important to believe in positive things, rather than negative things. What ever you believe, you will find that you are correct. The universe has a way of presenting to you exactly what you believe. If you think life is great, you are correct. If you think life is tough, you will be proved correct too.

Remember, I said earlier that I felt that the Universe is within me? The external world is only a reflection of my internal world!

A lot of people say that the world is very negative, but that's not exactly true. Look around you. Everything exists simultaneously in this universe, the positive as well as negativity. There is poverty, there is wealth, there is sickness, there is health, there is love and there is hatred and fear, and there is happiness and there is despair and so on. And there is not more negative than positive.

It's just because we choose to see the world in that way that it feels like there is more negative. The more we choose to see it this way and give it our focus and energy, the more of it we draw into our lives and create it in our own personal reality.

Remember, I believe that this reality is created by our collective consciousness. That's what I felt I broke through, during my NDE. Each of us as individuals always has the choice to choose what we want to see and believe as reality.

One of the most powerful things I got from my NDE is how loved I am; unconditionally loved. So now, I continue to love myself unconditionally. I would strongly suggest practicing unconditional self love.

I said the Universe is only a reflection of me. If I am frustrated with the way life is working for me, it is futile to change the external elements without looking at what's going on internally. A lot of us are very negative towards ourselves. We are our own worst enemies. The first thing I would say is to stop judging yourself and stop beating yourself up for where you are in life right now. If I am finding that I am constantly frustrated with people and judging them, it is because that is how I am internally treating myself all the time. I am only expressing outward my inner dialogue to myself. The more I love myself unconditionally, the easier it is for me to see beauty in this world and beauty in others.

If I can love myself and not judge myself, and see my own perfection, then I will automatically see all these in others! And the more I love myself, the more love I will have for others. It's not possible to love another more than you love yourself. Contrary to popular belief that it's selfish to love yourself, this is just so not true. We cannot give what we do not have.

No matter where you are, it is only the culmination of your thoughts and beliefs up to that point, and you can change it. Remember, I received my cancer at the 11th hour. Even when the doctors said it was too late, it was still not too late. So the first thing is to realize that it is never too late to do something or change anything. It's important to see the power that the present moment holds in turning our life around.

If you believe in things like "like attracts like" then the absolute best way to attract what's best for you is to love yourself to the point where you are filled with love, and you will attract to your life everything that confirms this belief about yourself. It's actually very simple really. When you realize your own magnificence, you will only attract magnificence into your life.

First of all, remember that I feel that the universe is only a reflection of me. So the unconditional love is not extended out to the world (or universe) it is unconditional love that I extend inwardly, towards myself! Each day, I learn to love myself unconditionally.

Also, let me explain that there is a difference between "being loving" and "being love". "Being loving", means giving love to another whether you have any for yourself or not. It means giving what you yourself may or may not even have to give. This type of giving of love can eventually drain you because we don't always have a limitless supply. Then we look to the other to replenish our pool of love, and if it is not forthcoming, we stop being loving to ourselves, because we are exhausted.

Being love, on the other hand, means loving myself unconditionally so that it overflows and anyone and everyone around me just becomes an automatic recipient of my love. The more I love myself the more it flows out to others. It almost feels like being a vessel for love to flow through. When I am being love, I don't need people to behave a certain way in order for them to be a recipient of my love. They are automatically getting my love as a result of me loving myself. So to stop being love, to me, means to stop loving myself. Hence, I will not stop being love on account of another.

So how would you suggest someone elevate their own loving energy?

I feel it's my self-dialogue that either elevates or diminishes the energy I radiate outwards. When my inner dialogue turned against me, over time, it depleted my energy, and caused a downward spiral in my external circumstances. I was really, really positive on the outside, effervescent, loving, etc. etc. and still my world was crumbling around me, and I was getting depleted and sicker and sicker.

Sometimes, when we see someone who is really positive and effervescent and kind, yet their lives are crumbling around them we may think "see, this being positive thing doesn't work". But see, here's the thing. We don't know what the person's own inner dialogue. We don't know what they are telling themselves, inside their own heads, day in and day out.

Remember, I am not advocating "thinking positive" in a Pollyanna sort of way. "Thinking positive" can be tiring and to some people it can mean "suppressing" the negative stuff that happens. And it ends up being more draining.

I am talking about my own mental dialogue to myself. What am I telling myself, day in day out inside my head? I feel it's so very important not to have judgment and fear in my own mental dialogues to myself. When our own inner dialogue is telling us we are safe, unconditionally loved, accepted, we then radiate this energy outwards and change our external world accordingly.

I also think it's very important to see perfection in the moment. The present moment is very powerful. Each moment holds promise and each moment can be a turning point for the rest of your life.

I am often misunderstood when I say that each moment is perfect and that everything is perfect. People are afraid of seeing perfection in a situation that is not of their liking, thinking that seeing perfection means not changing it. To me, seeing perfection does not mean keeping the situation static. It means seeing perfection exactly where you are in your journey right now, no matter where that may be. Seeing perfection in the moment, wherever in the journey that moment might be; that is seeing perfection.

You want to know the best part about feeling this positive energy about yourself? I don't feel I even have to say anything to anyone to uplift them, but just because of my own loving self talk to myself, people around me feel my positive presence. Without even having to say anything, you will start to notice people being attracted to your positive presence, and be energized by your energy. Your positive inner dialogue helps elevate others around you even when you are not saying anything to them, just thinking positive thoughts about yourself. Because energy just radiates and flows out and touches others. This is why this self loving inner dialogue is so very important in making a better world.

Have you noticed that there are people who just seem to light up a room when they walk in? Or people you just notice, even in a crowd because they are just radiating energy? You can bet that they have a very positive and strong self image and are running some very positive internal self dialogue programs.

What are we internally telling ourselves each day and every day? Are we just beating ourselves up and judging ourselves? Are we too hard on ourselves and are we our own worst enemy? That's the real work. I feel we must start by changing that inner dialogue, by loving ourselves more and more, and then, even without having to say or do anything to anyone, the whole outer world changes to reflect that inner world. I have really noticed my physical world and others around me reflecting this.

In that NDE state, I felt I was connected to everything, I was everything and everything was me. It's something that is so hard to explain, because the right words just don't exist. It felt like there is no separation until we come into physical life and look at the world through the mind. In fact, it felt like the separation is the mind.

There was so much clarity in that state, but somehow it didn't feel like the clarity came from the mind. It's as if something else was doing the understanding and that something else was able to identify the mind as being separate and the mind as being the cause for disconnection from the all that is. It felt like the ego and the mind were one. So in that state, which is beyond the mind, there was no ego and no attachment.

All was one. The connection was felt with everything. There was no discrimination and no judgment against anyone and anything. It felt as if suffering was caused by our own mind turning against itself. It felt as if, whether we are criminal or cancer patient, it all stems from the same thing. It all stems from a sickness of, or separation from the mind. Or from how the mind interprets separation.

If only we knew how perfect and magnificent we are, there would be no hospitals and no prisons. It feels as if imperfection is the creation of the mind; judgment too, everything. As physical human beings, we need to process information through our minds. And all we perceive is separation, because that is how our minds process information. But beyond the mind, we are one. We are totally interconnected. We are actually not our mind. We are something much, much more.

Yet, when in that state, even though I felt one with everything, I still seemed to recognize myself as a separate being from the oneness, as if I had my own evolution. It was like I had this mind, which is not me, but I sort of had an obligation to "evolve" it as best I could, but I was outside of my mind looking at it. When we are in the physical, we are inside our mind, our mind looking out. And the separation between all becomes more glaring and obvious.

I felt like all the problems and issues of the world stemmed from our own and the collective mind. It felt like the collective mind is what creates the illusion which we live in, with all its collective thoughts and beliefs.

But I believe we always have the choice to see right through this, and create differently. If I choose to do this, those around me are affected accordingly. And then people, who are appropriate for us, will connect with us because they will be at the same level of this clarity, and will be accessing this same oneness pool from the same fog, and they are fumbling and struggling along with life. Where as those with the clarity are transparent and practically walk right through the ones in the fog. And no one can bump into them or derail them, because they are so transparent and light in their energy.

That's kind of how it feels, like I couldn't understand how we could be taught one thing in a religious studies class about the creation of life and then learn something completely different, about the same topic in a science class. I spent a lot of years searching for answers to my confusion, but never found anything satisfactory. Until I had my NDE, that is. Now I don't search anymore. I still don't know all the answers, but I don't feel the need to search anymore. I feel death taught me how to live life.

First of all, to me, suffering is an illusion. And I wish there was a better word to use, because when I had cancer, and people would tell me it's only an illusion, I would get even more frustrated. The feeling that comes is: "If it's only an illusion, then why does it feel so real to me?" and "So, how do I break thru the illusion?" So sometimes I hesitate to use the word illusion when others are suffering. It can cause more frustration. But right now, it is the only word I can think of to explain what it is I am trying to say.

When I was sick, I had thought that maybe the "illusion is what we find out this realm is only after death. That is, something that can only be viewed from the other realm, and while in this realm we are "bound" to the illusion.

The way I view life now, nothing exists in this world until we bring it into our consciousness/awareness. Nothing exists until we express it, either as an individual or as a collective. The more awareness we draw to something, the more real it becomes in the physical. As a collective, we are probably inadvertently creating our physical reality by default, unknowingly. But as individuals, we always have choice to create differently than what is being created "out there".

The problem we have right now, including a lot of the suffering we feel, is because we are not aware of this. I don't have any universal answers as to why we are not made aware of this from birth.

Which leads me to the question of your purpose? So would you say that your purpose now is to just be here, in the physical and express yourself in the physical or is there something more?

To me, the purpose is BEING. And that is different from being here. The focus is different. When the focus is on being here, we can get lost here. The physical world is full of "other people's version" of life. Whereas when the purpose is BEING, it means being you, and only subscribing to your version of life (or creating your version of life). To me, it means being an expression of exactly who I am. My purpose is to be as much as I can be!

Before my experience, I used to pursue my purpose externally. But after my NDE, I discovered there was nothing outside of myself. And there was nothing to pursue. I just had to be and the external would fall into place.

When we "pursue" externally, we seem to see the world as being competitive and limited and we use external measures to judge our achievements. To me, here in lies the illusion. There is no limited supply of "beingness". We seem to measure our "beingness" by the achievement of goals. I don't, and neither do most people, who are happy. My point is to shift your views. See the magnificence in your being whether you are rich or poor, physically impaired or not, with one you love or not and so on.

I am now just focused on being, and am now the creator of my life that is, the artist of my life. I no longer sit and think about external competition. Each of us is unique, with unique traits and talents. I only have to express my own "beingness" and "uniqueness". A true artist doesn't really care about whether there is anyone who can create as well as or better then he. He is too busy expressing himself, purely for the purpose of expressing. He has found something within and is only expressing his inner beauty, and the world shares in it. The more inner beauty you uncover and express, the more the universe shares in it and reflects it back to you. That's the difference between "being" and "pursuing".

Whatever or whoever you are, open yourself up to the possibility that perhaps life can be different if you think differently from the way you do now.

But yet, in the state I am in now, I can only see perfection where I am, at not knowing any absolute answers and making it my own personal journey to expand myself, and experience more each day. As I express and make myself more and more I feel more connected with the universe.

People's lives are "built" on certain beliefs and their lives work within the framework of everyone around them believing that those things are true. If everyone around you believes something, you are inclined to believe it too, and think of it as being true. And your life evolves as a mass consciousness based on these seeming "truths". This way of being has been going on for a long time. It has the feel of being solid with solid foundations. In that other state, it felt like, this is how we created this present physical reality – this "illusion" by everybody believing in the same things; that, in itself, makes it true for the mass consciousness.

If there was a message or lesson from your NDE that you wish everyone could know or understand, something that you wish you could shout out form the rooftops, what would it be?

I would want everyone to know that every part of you is magnificent; your ego, mind, intellect, body, spirit and soul. It's who you are, a beautiful product of this universe's creation. Every part of you is perfect, there is nothing to let go, nothing to forgive, noting to attain. You are already everything you need to be. We make it so complicated, but it's not.

If a religion makes you feel lesser than God, then you have either misinterpreted it, or it's not doing a good job of teaching you the truth.

If a Guru or Teacher or Master makes you feel that you are not "yet" enlightened and still have more to learn, "release" or "let go of" before getting there, then they are not doing a good job of teaching you who you are or you are misunderstanding them.

Most of our suffering stems from our feeling "less than". We are not less than anything or anyone. We are complete. The only thing you need to learn is that you already ARE what you are seeking to attain.

Just express your uniqueness with abandon. That's why you are made the way you are and that's why you are here in the physical world.

……by the time I was twenty I had started on a path that would lead to fame and riches for all the wrong reasons and after twenty-five years of this, I had succeeded in accomplishing most of my goals. The way up the ladder was not always easy nor did my survival have anything to do with my design. It seemed that my curse was that I was as untouchable as I was unhappy no matter how the stories and wealth accumulated.

I soon found myself in a space and place unknown to me, having arrived there at a velocity I was unfamiliar with, with a force of attraction like that of metal to a magnet. I entered a place where it started to turn dark as if I was inside a cloud and it was becoming denser and darker, and in that darkness which became almost total, I glimpsed a tiny star or light, which from the exact time I noticed it attracted me without hesitation towards it, with the same breakneck speed and velocity.

At the same time, my love or the most marvelous feeling that can be experienced was becoming larger. The closer I got my exultation overflowed, the light became larger or it was emanating from someplace …I don't know. The idea is that I found myself in that light. So brilliant, so white, but without disturbing me; it was pure energy, the force, the love, the life – I was already home. The sensations are indescribable as we are very limited in this life; over there, was an unknown world of new sensations opening up – of understanding of what, up until then, has not been understood and you do love, my god how you love.

And then I felt as if someone approached to receive me, until I felt his presence in front of me. As if with a human form but without a physical body, everything was light and energy and love and we communicated perfectly. Not speaking but with thought and the mind. I started to be aware of more beings like him that surrounded me. I could not be contained in my joy and contentment; everything was peace and harmony and I began fully to inhabit that space which was mine.

As I laid there I began to feel very light. I felt as if I were floating on clouds, but not. I looked around and saw what appeared to be a sort of fog. It was the color of storm clouds, some light and some dark and soft. I looked down to see my hands and they weren't there. Then I looked for my body but it wasn't there either. I was there but not there. The thing that stood out most to me at the time was how peaceful, no hot or cold, no anger, no nothing.

I think that I was shown that death is not to be feared, but to be looked forward to, when the time is right. Timing is everything. "The place of nothing" showed me the peaceful place that waits for each of us. I also learned if you want something bad enough, it's worth fighting for. You can't just give up because something is too difficult… For awhile, I was always in a hurry. I wanted everything right now. I have since learned that everything comes in its own time and I must be patient.

This Appendix will contain various excerpts and clips that you may find fruitful in adding additional understanding to the concepts we have been looking at in this book. If you find something that seems important, make a note or write further on the topic in your own words. Write in the book where you found it, for this is the perfect surroundings to find it again or perhaps something more.

C 1.0 (* Chapter 6 Ouspensky and the Law of Vibration)

From: In Search of the Miraculous, by Ouspensky, Page 127

The law of octaves explains why there are no straight lines in nature. At the moment of the retardation of vibration a deviation from the original direction takes place. Let us assume that a movement begins at "do". It will continue in a straight line through "mi". But a deviation occurs between "mi" and "fa" which causes a change from the original direction. From "fa" through "si", the movement continues in the new direction. Between "si" and "do" the second interval occurs which causes a new change in direction. The next octave gives an even more marked deviation so that the line of octaves may eventually complete a circle.

Pythagoras' Comma

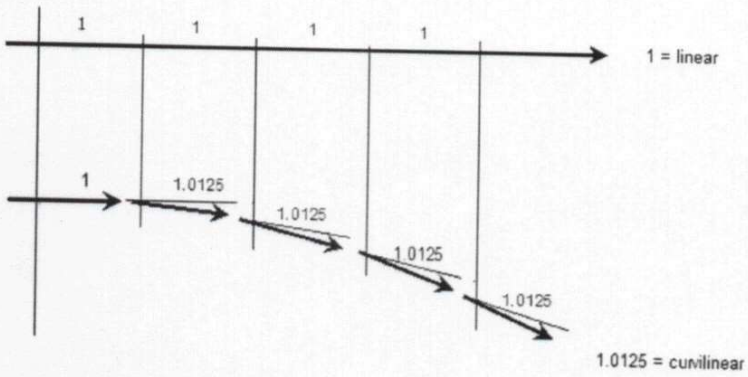

The musical interval by which twelve fifths exceed seven octaves,

$$\frac{(\frac{3}{2})^{12}}{2^7} = \frac{3^{12}}{2^{19}} = \frac{531441}{524288} = 1.013643265.$$

Comma of Didymus also called a syntonic comma.

The musical interval by which four fifths exceed a seventeenth (i.e., two octaves and a major third),

$$\frac{(\frac{3}{2})^4}{2^2(\frac{5}{4})} = \frac{3^4}{2^4 \cdot 5} = \frac{81}{80} = 1.0125,$$

This is why we get to have a space-time experience, because we don't have a real ONE. Our "one" is more so it gets to circle around and around, not linear.
How does this affect a market? Many ways to look at it, one is to see the market as a platonic solid rotating and as it moves from one side to the next, in our relative view; then there appears to be a jump of sorts, it moves on a different linear plane to the next side of the solid and this change could be difficult to see on a continuous 2D chart of price and time bars.

If the market was a clear mathematical relationship it would be simple to figure out; on the other hand though, if the market is a harmonic interval, then the transposition to a strict mathematical formula would have to account for this small variance (Pythagoras' comma, Didymus' comma, syntonic comma, etc.). So far mathematicians haven't figured this out because of the dynamic nature of this creation. Some come close, but no cigar; which is probably a good thing because once this comma is taken out, you're back to one and Dorothy is back in Kansas.

You only have to be going in the right direction to make money in the market; not know it exactly. But I suspect for some, it's not just making money but it's a quest to figure out the whole enchilada.

C 1.2 (*Chapter 8 - Vibrational Time)

Arthur Young's writings on Time

Here is an excerpt from the writings of Arthur Young, with one of his concepts of time and its possible relationship to pi. The external has many explanations and these are true to those who bring them into their core belief structure.

"Relativity deals with pieces of curvature, and it fails to emphasize the cycle of time where all this curvature is put together into one great cycle of action. Let me point this out another way. What is called the "volume" of the Einstein-Eddington hypersphere -- which is to say, the volume of the universe in the sense both of the space it encloses and the time which is in process of being enclosed -- this "volume" has the formula:

$2pi^2R^3$

An ordinary physical sphere has the volume:

$4/3pR^3$

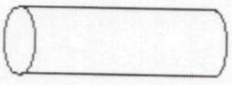

Without any special knowledge one can see that:

1. There is no "t" (for time) in the hypersphere.

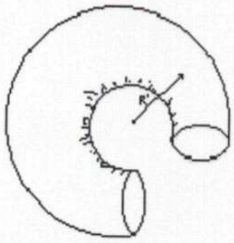

2. There is, however, an extra pi.

Could it be the case that pi takes the place of time? Suppose for simplicity we represent the ordinary (physical) universe, or the instantaneous universe, as a circle. The area of this circle has the equation pR2. Suppose now we multiply this by time:

piR^2 x time = piR^2T, a cylinder

Now suppose we bend this cylinder around to meet itself, that is, into a circle like a doughnut.

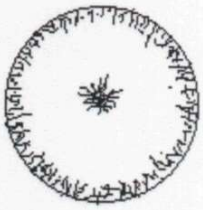

Radius = R'

The circumference of this new circle will be 2piR and the volume of the cylinder bent into a circle will be:

$2piR' \times piR^2 = 2pi^2R'R^2$

Now let R' be the same as R, and we have:

$2pi^2R^3$

In other words, instead of "t" we have 2piR. Time is replaced by a cycle of action. The measure of this cycle of action in terms of time varies with the entity. If it is a photon, it is $1/10^{22}$ seconds (the photon that can create a proton). If a bacterium like E. coli, then about 20 minutes (the time required for it to reproduce, or create two cells from one). If a person, it has its life cycle in a physical body, perhaps 80 years..."

C 1.3 Desire and Belief

Belief plus Desire = contrast
Changing a Belief is done with a Desire
A clear Desire becomes a Belief
Holding a thought makes it true (makes it real, reality)
Desire is different from yearning (yearning has a feeling of lack, pure desire doesn't)

C 1.4 Pretending

Pretending you have changed your feeling when you haven't, won't work. The feeling you are experiencing in the body is a real experience, it is in reality happening in space and time right now. A thought about a feeling in the body is not the same. The thought can be quite different than the feeling: an example may be that you are feeling a sensation in your leg and you think it is pain and therefore it isn't ok.

The truth may be that the sensation is a healing process taking place where cells are regenerating from a previous injury and the in-flowing energy matching the new creative pattern of regeneration causes a physical sensation that is noticed by the conscious mind. If the mind is aware of the healing nature of the body and that it is natural and ok for the physical sensation to be happening, then the mind is in sync with the process.

However, if the mind is not familiar with this new sensation and has no knowledge of what is happening, then the mind may choose a "thought of protection" to guard the body from anything new until it sees it as ok. This resistance to the new sensation in the mind would be in opposition to the body's normal healing process and because of the conflict; there would be a diminishing of the energy flow, like ocean waves crashing into each other. If the mind lets this protective thought go, and finds something else to pay attention to, then the body would resume the healing process, unobstructed by the minds errant thought.

C 1.5 Positive and Negative

Unconditional love can be defined as having good thoughts about everything that is happening or has happened or will happen.

If you only have good thoughts (positive energy), they will be a vibrational match to source energy, universal creative energy, or what we may call love, joy, happiness, empowerment etc.

If the mind is only vibrating at the level of empowerment then it can't have a desire (creation focus) that is different than that empowerment. A mind can only focus on what it is holding, and if it is holding beliefs and desires of empowerment, then it can not create from scarcity or lack or fear or any other non-empowerment place.

Unconditional trading: "How I think about trading will determine how I trade". If I think a loss isn't ok, I create from a feeling of (-) negative and I can't create (+) profit. If I see everything as ok, all that happens in the trading experience as positive, then I can create from this (+) energy and realize what I desire.

The mind is a wonderful machine of sorts, and can only focus on what it holds before it. If these non-empowerment type of thoughts and possibilities are not available to use within this creating focus window of attention and awareness, then the only possible outcome or creation is from what "is" in this window. Herein lies the key to creating what one wants, if one is willing to observe what is in the window and to select those things that will allow the desire to match it.

Control of what resides in the minds window of creation is the work the individual must perform in order to realize what is wanted. Allowing negative energy to be present will not let positive energy be available in its fullness. These intrusions into the sublime creative process are the only thing that will delay or stop the creation from happening.

If one were to think of having unconditional love for everything in ones awareness, then the negative energy will be lessened if not completely eliminated. With no negative energy to counteract the desired positive creating energy, it will create. The Universe is very predictable and runs by precise law. It always balances and returns to harmony and when presented with positive creating energy forming in a matrix compatible to its vibration, then it will form.

Positive energy is additive, negative energy is diminishing in a positive matrix. This reality we are in is a positive energy matrix and has negative energy as a contrasting element, but the whole of this space/time physical form we are experiencing is positive energy. Bringing negative energy into it creates contrast and new possibilities and what we call movement, change and life. It is all necessary, but in desiring to create or add to this environment, we must abide by the additive law, and that is that positive energy builds on positive energy and negative energy will reduce it.

Conscious creation is the utilizing of positive matching energy being joined in a sustainable environment, a cyclical set recurring in time and space. The mind is a recurring matrix platform that sustains cyclic energy. Bringing energies together into this platform allows a mixing of sorts to occur and this new mixed energy is sustained in the cyclic loops of our physical brain. These new patterns of energy are then available to be used as new creative platforms and thus allowing an unlimited source of original possibilities.

How we create a trading environment, a trading system, is from our existing pool of creative energy, from our stored thoughts (energy) in our brain (memory). If we want to create something different from what we have been creating in the past, we will need to change something. We will have to add something new into our mixing bowl, to get a different result. We will need to bring together energy patterns that are capable of joining and being sustained in a cyclic loop that is available for our use when we want to use it.

Fashioning the creative structure of our mind into an efficient machine that manages energy patterns and brings about manifest desire is what we are striving to accomplish here. Forming a successful trading environment takes place in the mind first then it shows up in the real world out here. Without the mind holding the energy patterns of successful trading, they can't be recognized in the external.

C 1.6 Vibrational Range

You can only attract thoughts within your present vibrational range. Have you ever wondered where thoughts come from? Most of us have the notion we are the creators of our thoughts, that we think them. But how do they appear out of the blue, how do they just show up and give us what we want or what we don't want. Why would I think a thought that scares me and makes me uncomfortable, why would I be so unkind to myself? I don't see myself as self-loathing or wanting to deliberately cause me unpleasant feelings, yet the thoughts that come to me do just that at times.

A way to look at this, is to consider that all thoughts are available to all people, (all vibrational patterns are available at all times) but because everyone is holding a unique vibrational space or we could say a particular vibrational range, then what is possible to come into this range or space is very limited and will be very different for each person. So the thought that comes to you may be quite different than the one that comes to me, even though, we may be in the same situation and environmental surroundings.

Let's say we are walking down a dark alley and a loud noise happens behind us. Let's say I have just come from a horror movie and have many thoughts about this movie still buzzing around in my head, while conversely the other person has just come from a meditation retreat where they have been quieting their mind and at the present time have very few if any thoughts present.

I will have different thoughts come to me, because the only thoughts that can exist in my awareness must match my present vibrational range, so I will probably have a thought come that is akin to the horror figures I have been entertaining since the movie and I will react to this thought as something bad is happening. The other person may just hear the noise in a very neutral manner and the thought that comes may be what the noise really is, a garbage can just got tipped over by a dog.

Let's take this to a trading example, I have just been reviewing all the losses I have had in the past and how inept I am as a trader at times, and as I open the charts and look at what is happening today, I have thoughts appear in my mind and what I think they are about. They must be in the same vibrational range or they can't appear in my focus, my window of focus will only allow clarity, and clarity is based on the vibrational range we are presently in. My wonderful mind will coordinate these vibrations into patterns that match and that will work in this present moment. Granted they could be very different at another time, but in this moment, they must agree with where I am. If they could agree with where I am not, I will not be aware of them.

So what do I want to do to prepare myself for trading? What is in my best interest as far as providing myself with a vibrational range for productive thoughts to come in at the right time so I can use them to trade profitably? I think you get the picture, and if you don't well I would read this again. This is not just a suggestion you can do or not, this is absolutely necessary if you are to coordinate your mind with what is happening on a screen in the present moment. The mind must connect with what we are doing and provide the proper train of thought to navigate the trading process to success and profit.

C 1.7 Learning to learn

One can only understand what one has already learned. Sounds like an old ancient riddle; maybe it is. It is very important one understands this or the willingness to learn something that doesn't make any sense will never be learned. First we all agree that if you try to learn something in a foreign language that you can not speak you probably won't learn much. You first have to have a base language that is the same as the thing you are trying to learn.

Once you have the language then you need a foundation to learn from. It may be very hard to learn how to multiply fractions if you don't have a working knowledge of numbers and math in general. In this case if you haven't heard of numbers or fractions or adding and multiplying then all of this is like a foreign language and you are simply lost. To be able to do this type of math one has to start at some beginning and put into your vocabulary this new language and integrate it with your own. After enough input and practice (integration) then a math problem becomes solvable.

To learn what someone else is trying to tell you, you must learn their language. Sure you both speak English but what is being said won't be heard unless it is already integrated in "your" English. An example: say you see a book on Neuroauralgeometrics. Your mind immediately tries to find what this means. If you have never heard the word, you may look at the parts of the word that you do know and put them together to come up with the meaning. Neuro could mean something to do with nerves, neural paths, or? Then aural could be about, let's see, isn't aural about hearing or maybe auras, the energy field around a person?

Ok we're starting to get something here. Now let's see, geometrics; that's about geometry or lines, circles, diagrams, maybe charting, the study of it, hmm. So with this information from my own memory I can probably come up with a few definitions of what I think Neuroauralgeometrics means. One may be the charting of the neural energy around the physical body of a person. Maybe it has to do with measuring sound waves in the inner ear, or how the nerves pick up the sound waves in the inner ear and forms it into some geometrical symbol or unique impulse pattern to be able to send it to the brain.

Well, you get the point; the definitions one will come up with, will be from the already existing knowledge base within the person. So to be able to know what it really means, one would already have to know what it means. Hang in there; this is easier than maybe you think. All one has to do to learn a new language is to put in the new words and how the words go together (syntax) and you will learn the new language.

It's a function of time though, so when someone gets discouraged too soon, and they say they can't learn it, no, they just quit too soon. So all one has to do is put the information in your memory, say read the stuff, maybe over and over till it starts to make sense, which really means that it is becoming integrated into your knowledge, becoming something you believe, something that is yours. So when this becomes yours you can use it, when it's someone else's you may not be able to use it.

So this is the key to learning, which is to take something outside of yourself and bring it inside where it becomes you, your knowledge. Then it is easy to understand because it is literally what you understand with. I find if I'm reading something from a person that is a lot different than I am, then I have to read and re-read many times what they are saying, because at first all I get is what I'm hearing; and I'm hearing only from within. You need to take time and be with that which seems to be without and allow it to come within; even if it takes 3, 6, 10 readings.

Until you get it, you don't. Why spend the time reading things only once if you really can't use it. Better to read one thing 10 times that you can use, than to read 10 things you can't.
So what does neuroauralgeometrics mean? You would have to say; and that becomes what it is for you until you change it.

C 1.8 Focus

Our brain is the physical repository of all our accumulated energy patterns (beliefs, thoughts) with which we use to attach new thought (energy patterns). Beliefs are just thought patterns we use a lot more than others, they are like a rut or familiar road we use. We have to fit new ideas (thoughts, energy patterns) into our physical repository (brain) and so there must be a matching place to fit (round peg in square holes don't fit).

Put new beliefs in with clarity and positive energy (good feelings) - if you feel negative (bad) the pattern will change (invert) and not match. Other opposing beliefs already in the mind must be monitored to not let them come to the present creative platform (awareness, attention, focus). This Universe is a limited, focused experience and creation occurs within this focus. Monitor this focus and keep it positive and directed, clear. (Discipline, will, attention)

Observe the thoughts, don't get lost in them. The more thoughts that are present and given attention, the more difficult it is to bring them all into alignment. Stay in awareness and focus on desire (not on what might not work, but what you want to work).

Focusing Energy

We focus energy by our attention to something. Attention is the window we look through and this narrowing of vision focuses energy in direct proportion to how specific we look. If our view is very broad then it is like the rays of the Sun dispersing over a large area as opposed to being funneled through a lens that concentrates the "view" on a very specific small part of the area.

This focusing is equivalent to forcing many photons into the same space and so it becomes hot, it is full of energy and very powerful. When our attention is focused onto a very specific thought and it is kept there for a long period of time, then the energy builds and becomes hot so to speak, to bring about the physical manifestation of that thought through this rich supply of creative energy. A cursory glance at a thought will do little to bring about its realization, but a sustained focus over time will build and build until it becomes real (realized).

We can focus on three things:
1.) Imagining the past
2.) Imagining the future
3.) Seeing the present

When we are seeing the present, we are sustaining what is already present and has been created. We cannot create from this focus because it is already created.

When we are imagining from the past, we are recreating what has already been, and are bringing it back again, to override our seeing of the present, This view is creative in the sense that it is creating something other than what is already created in the present, but it is not new.

When we are focusing on the future, we are using creative energy to bring about something new, something that will over ride and become the present. This focus into the future is the combining of a desire (a new thought we want) with our existing belief structure. This overlapping of two patterns, one that is present (belief) and one that wants to be present (desire) is the way the energy can remain present in a cyclic pattern as a new creation. If the belief pattern is too different from the desire pattern then they will not match and combine into a self-sustaining cycle. Either the belief pattern must be removed from the focusing window with a new matching one taking its place or the desire is allowed to be the total focus and it will create its own self-sustaining pattern into the present moment pattern if the underlying belief structure is one that supports creation of a new desire into reality.

C 1.9 Reality is extremely temporary

When one stops to think about how long something lasts, it is amazingly quite short, in fact it doesn't last at all, it comes and goes, and if it comes again and again we get the idea it is lasting a long time, but all anything ever lasts is just the one moment it existed in the present moment and then it passes on and the next comes in; a constant flow of newness, a constant stream of the next thing, not the last thing. So when one is wondering why bad things can hang around so long, it must be that the person is re-creating them over and over for them to keep lining up to come into the present moment.

This is a wonderful thing to understand, because when one realizes that change is only as far away as the next moment and if one is willing to have some dominion over what is allowed to pass through ones awareness, then what may have been not ok, can instantly change to what one desires as the focus is shifted from what has just passed to what one truly desires. If there is a harmonizing belief available to nest with, the desire connects with it and enters the moment realized. If there is not a balancing belief that will match the desire, then the "focus" is still shifted from the previous awareness of "not ok", but the realization will have to wait for a proper matrix to be realized in form.

With a proper set of established positive creative beliefs, one has the ability to mold into their experience of life circumstances, scenarios, events, situations, conditions, actions, wishes and desires that bring about the heart's desire.

C 1.10 Creation cycle

Creation is a flow from something to something else, from some thing to another thing, from this to that, it is a flow in what we may call separation (2 things). Things can't be things unless there is more than one. As soon as we have at least 2 things we can have movement (time), space is three things: 3D. It isn't important that there is "a" truth or right way to think of something, because there are an infinite number of right or true ways, but it is necessary that ones beliefs match ones desires to have the creation process be able to bring about your desires.

New creation will be made in the matrix of your beliefs. A matrix of abundance beliefs will create abundance desires but not scarcity desires. A matrix of scarcity beliefs will create scarcity desires but not abundance desires. The vibrational patterns of abundance and scarcity are very different.

A straight edge ruler will not make a curved line and a compass or curved form will not make a straight line. The inherent vibrational pattern of a belief must be similar to the vibrational pattern of the desire or the two will not come together to form a composite energy form, it will come together as dissonance and diminish the energy pattern to something less than both the belief and the desire. It will be a negative result instead of an additive positive one.

C 1.11 Papillon

In the 1973 movie Papillon written by Dalton Trumbo; Steve McQueen and Dustin Hoffman are sentenced to life in prison at Devil's Island. After many years, several escape attempts and long periods of time in isolation they are finally put on an Island with very high steep rocky cliffs that fall straight down to a torrent of violent waves crashing against the rocks.

Papillon (Steve McQueen) sits on the edge of the cliff for a long time watching the water, day after day, week after week, months, years? Finally he runs back to his friend (Dustin Hoffman) and tells him he has found what he has been looking for all these long years, a way out (the Rosetta Stone, the Holy Grail). Of course Dustin Hoffman is crazy now but Papillon decides he's out of here. So he gets his bag of coconuts and goes to the edge and jumps.

So much for the movie review, but Trumbo has given an interesting metaphor. Metaphors can be applied to many things so let's use it to take a different look at trading. It's interesting that both the ocean and the market have waves. The waves are big or little, have some kind of cyclical nature and can be benefic or malefic.

Papillon saw there was a danger of just jumping into the ocean without knowing where the waves would take him. The waves crashing into the rocks were certain disaster so he had to be sure to catch the right wave. When it's life or death you take time to be sure. I assume Papillon was not an expert on waves when he was thrown into prison and on the island he didn't have access to the internet or outside information.

So what he did was observe for himself what was happening and found his own way to know. When he saw it, he had no doubt because he saw it. Reading a book on how to know waves doesn't give the same results as actually knowing from personal experience. Taking someone else's Holy Grail won't work until you find your own.

C 1.12 Simple – Complex

One way to make money is to study and learn all there is to know about trading so we won't fail (of course it is impossible to learn all there is to know but we can take this path anyway). After all the gathering of information we form a plan, test it and sure enough it works; we can make money now. Another question we may want to look at is does this plan I made fit "me"? Is it easy to use and do I enjoy the time spent doing it?

Let's say that the market we want to take money from is like a body of water with waves on it. We can dip out water at any place we want; top, middle or bottom of the wave. We only need to decide where to tip our bucket and let the water flow in. Of course we realize that if we tip the bucket where there isn't any water to flow in, then the water in our bucket will flow out.

Also we see that water moves differently in different kinds of waves; the top and bottom of a swell moves very different than the crashing or surging surf. So lets get our feet wet and dip some water into the bucket. Oh you don't like the idea of standing in strange water!

Ok, so we come up with a plan to do the bucket dipping game without getting our feet wet but it's a little more complicated of course. We decide to stand on a bridge over the water and we get this bungee cord and measure it to the exact length to let us jump off the bridge and fall right down over the water to the perfect level to dip. Then we calculate the exact time to jump and with both hands holding the bucket we can jump, dip the bucket into the water and get flung back onto the bridge.

Sounds good; so we get the signal, jump, dip fly back to the deck of the bridge with our water in the bucket. Sound a little unrealistic? Well there are lots of traders who do something very similar when they trade. It's quite exhilarating I've heard, but is this plan one that fits my personality that I can trust and enjoy in making profits trading? Wouldn't it be much simpler to wade into the water, stand there in the waves, feeling each one literally, knowing first hand what is going on and being able to dip anytime I want, being able to walk out of the water anytime I didn't feel comfortable and come back in when I do.

Dipping and trading is much easier to do standing on firm ground without exhilarating emotion but sound mental clarity and a simple plan that I love doing. Yes love doing it, if I don't love it I should ask the question why not? Don't confuse excitement with love, excitement is based on tension and release, love is based on balance and harmony. The awe of peace is a most sublime experience compared to the emotional edge of excitement. Peace can last forever, emotional excitement wears out over time, and in fact the body can't physically maintain the discordant energy of tension (excitement) it saturates to the point of dilution. Trading in excitement is chaos.

C 1.13 Matching your vibration to a market!

Everything has a unique form, essence, energy signature if you will. That is why a dog is different than a snake, you different than me, IBM is different than MSFT.

Some people like Classical Music, Rock, Jazz, R&B, New Age, Rap, Folk or whatever seems to resonate with them. This is literally true; the resonating vibration of a particular musical style will either fit your natural vibration or not fit it. When it doesn't fit, a mismatch, it is called dissonant and you don't like it. When it matches you love it because it is the same as you, it is you in a musical way, a harmonious way.

When you trade a particular stock or commodity and never seem to make any money, there is a very good possibility you and it are experiencing a dissonant relationship and this doesn't work. When you find the stock or commodity that literally sings to you, and sings your song, it's a slam dunk when it comes to trading because you win here. This perfect match enables you to be totally balanced and in harmony with you and it and there is no interference, no confusion. Trying to dance with someone who is dancing to a different tune isn't going to work.

Think about how everyone has a unique DNA configuration. Like fingerprints they are all different and so is everything else, including markets. This DNA pattern will connect to other DNA patterns in a variety of ways. Some will produce beautiful works of art, or scores of music, or successful trading patterns with profitable results. Some will make us happy, other's will not. It is our job, to notice what is working and what isn't and to guide our path though this spiral jungle, this maze of vibrational structure to create what we desire.

When we are able to recognize what vibrational pattern we are resonating to, we can manifest from it a similar pattern, and this matching of patterns is our key to controlling everything we desire. Matching our vibration to a market is the underlying connection of creating a new result in our experience. Profitable and enjoyable results come from a matching of energies in a positive additive manifestation. Dissonant patterns that come together without this positive additive movement will do the opposite, it will be subtractive, it will diminish what we desire.

The easiest way to know if our vibrational platform is creating what we want is to pay attention to how we are feeling; how the body is reacting to the energies we are holding and mixing. A good feeling of a positive expectation and excitement is our clue we are on track and the creation is working just fine. A feeling of worry, doubt , fear, confusion and any other negative response in our experience is saying we need to look again and do something different,. We need to change our mind.

C 1.14 What is your strength?

One needs to identify where our strengths and weaknesses are. Can we see geometrical patterns or numbers better, do we remember words or numbers, pictures or sounds, long attention span or short. Make a list of what is natural for us and make our trading plan to fit this not someone else's. If we're a fish it would be nice to have some water to swim in rather than trying to fly through the air or run across the ground. Lots of successful ways to trade, but we need one that fits each of us personally.

Get to know our self before we get to know someone else. To know what someone else is trying to tell us, we need to know them and figure out what they are saying. Don't spend the time learning something we won't use. Knowing ahead of time what we are looking for, saves a lot of time later finding out that all the time and effort spent learning the wrong thing could have been avoided.

Spend quality time in the beginning deciding what we really want and who we really are. Looking for a Silver BMW convertible in the parking lot is much easier to find than looking for a car. How will we know when we find it unless we know what it is, how will we find our best way to trade unless we know our self! Don't blow this off too lightly; knowing your self is the most important thing you'll ever learn. You'll use this knowledge more than any other and with more success. Do you know what your vibration is? Do you care?

C 1.15 Project management

Years ago, before I was in the financial markets, I was a project manager in large industrial construction. These projects could be built several ways;
1. The project could be already fully designed with all the plans and time schedule complete,
2. It could be a design build where I started from scratch with an owner and had the plans and schedule created and then built it,
3. It could be a fast track design build were I didn't have the luxury of waiting until all the design work was done but started building as the plans were drawn.

In all these examples there is a common element that is absolutely necessary for a project to be built properly and on time. It is that the design and time schedule be realistic. Realistic means that it is physically possible for this new creation to be built and that sufficient time is scheduled. It also means that the new creation has a place to fit into the real world physically and energetically. Once the project is realistic, it is a done deal, just allow the time to pass and do everything on the plans and in the schedule.

With fast track, the design and schedule were made into smaller modules and each module would be built on it's time schedule. Sometimes modules could over lap and if it was realistic it wasn't a problem, just a little more to watch and keep on track. The scheduling I did back then was a flow chart - critical path management system where all the scheduled elements were put in flow patterns, where some elements that needed to be in place before the next one could be built and where there was no time allowance for slippage, this created a path through the flow chart that became the critical path.

If the critical path stayed on track it would get done on time. This is a great example if you want to be a successful trader. First you must decide how you are going to do it. Design it all first, put it down on paper, like a blue print, and schedule how long it will take to get it done.

So what are you going to build? Make it as real as you can. To just say I'm going to be a successful trader is like a business saying I want you to build me a building. Ok, what kind? What is the building supposed to do? If you are going to pay a price for this you might as well get what you want for your money and effort.

Think of trading as a business plan, where you write everything down in such a way that someone else could take the plan and build it into the business you want, without them needing to ask you any questions. If that is what you can put down on paper; then that is going to become real for you. After you have this kind of detailed plan, all that is left is making sure it stays on track. That's not that hard either, just start with 1, then 2, then 3, and so on till you get to the last one and there it is, a complete project.

I have watched huge complex facilities start with a hole in the ground and after I finished each part in the order it was supposed to be done, there in front of me was this incredible facility that looked just like the drawing on the paper. If you are doing fast track trading, be sure you still have the over all picture or goal in mind and get it down on paper and fill in the details as they come. Start only when a module is complete; never start anything that isn't complete in the planning stage, these will always take much longer than if you had waited for the paper.

A module is a piece that fits into the whole, so get the whole defined and the pieces can be built to fit. Trading before the whole business is complete can be costly, unless you know what you are doing. Stay within the limits you must place on yourself until the new business does it for you. Keeping focused is more work in fast track because you're doing two things at once, designing and building, figuring out how to trade and trading.

If these two get mixed up at times, as they can when you are under pressure, you pay the price. If you take the time to plan, and stay with the plan, you will never wonder what is going on. If while you are trading you start to wonder what you should do, this is a clue you need to stop and draw up the plans because you don't know what your building and it will cost you a lot of time and money until you do. There doesn't need to be any confusion or doubt in trading if you prepare before you buy or sell.

This is the same steps we take in using the Law of Vibration; clarify the desire (draw up the plans of the building you want). Maintain a proper platform of creative energy as the desires come into time/space (do all the steps in the order they are scheduled to be done and watch the building be born). Then maintain the new creation as one maintains a new building. The process of creation by nature, man, or our self, it is the same. Creating a successful trading experience is as predictable as building the building.

C 1.16 Energy Balance

Energy is balanced when it maintains its vibrational structure. This could be seen as a unique pattern, harmonically stable and able to remain unique within the structure of time and space. Something not in Energy Balance would be like the meshing of two vibrations that are vibrationally incompatible and like ocean waves crashing into each other, they would change the unique pattern of one or the other or both and as such would not be in Energy Balance. When there are compatible vibrations brought together, they will mesh into a pattern that will enhance each other to form a stronger pattern capable of retaining its form within time. It remains cyclically intact as a unique form perpetuating its existence in this space time field.

C 1.17 Paradigm: a fruit with six letters

A paradigm is like looking at a beautiful flower; that you put all your attention on and miss the rest of the flower garden. By concentrating on a particular way, you miss the rest of the story. In trading if you become myopic where you only see one way, the rest of the story will go unnoticed and with that, you will miss many opportunities beyond the one way.

Taking time occasionally to do something different, look another way, add something and leave something else out, change the ordinary. Look back at it; look into it, and look past it, look between the lines, between the bars or patterns. Let the mind freely associate and write down everything that pops up. Just relax and play for a while instead of being serious. Allow the new to surface and play with it long enough to decide if it is worth saving.

Here is a little exercise in seeing. Look at the letters below and see if you can find what they say? I'll give you a clue; it's a fruit with six letters.

SIBANXLETATENARS

Now play with it, and let the mind relax and see what you see, not what you think you should see. It is very easy to see when you look at it the right way. Looking at it any other way is hard.

Before looking at the answer on the next page, think about the clue and hear what is being said literally.

(Answer: BANANA (with) SIX LETTERS = SIBANXLETATENARS)

A paradigm is when you get stuck in one way of seeing and miss the "other" obvious.

C 1.18 What causes action?

An action is caused by a thought but it may not be the thought you think. (That is a statement to think about.) Do we really understand our thinking process and how it affects our actions?

You see a tiger coming and you have a thought, "I see a tiger". Now this isn't a thought that moves you (doesn't cause action), it is just a thought recognizing what you already know (awareness). If you haven't seen a tiger before, you couldn't have the thought: "I see a tiger"; you don't know what a tiger is. But if somewhere in the past you saw this "thing" and someone or something (book, TV, movie) told you it was a tiger then you know it. You learned its name. The name "tiger" or the thought "I see a tiger" is a symbol of the real thing.

So there are two tigers now; the real one that is walking around the jungle and the name, symbol or thought walking around in your mind. When you see the real one walking in the jungle, you compare "it" to the one in your mind, the symbol, and you re-member, you re-cognize (re-think) so this time you know it's a tiger, it matches your thought of what a tiger is.

Once you know it in your mind, you can add more information to it; tiger is an animal, is striped, is dangerous, is a man eater, could kill you, etc. Now when we see the real tiger walking around, all the symbols are re-cognized and you see not just a tiger, but a dangerous, man eating animal that can kill you. Now we have a thought that can move you, and probably move you pretty fast and soon.

The reason for the movement is because these other thoughts; like dangerous, could kill me, bring up more attached thoughts, like fight and flight responses, runaway, get away from these thoughts. So you run away or pick up a gun to protect yourself. The thought "I see a tiger" wasn't the thought that caused all this activity, it was thoughts attached to it. This is why it is very important to understand what you are thinking when you see something because your mind can leave the real thing and very quickly go to the attached symbols, and you could find yourself running or bailing out of a trade that you shouldn't be bailing out of.

This is how greed and fear give you the wrong results; they are not trading thoughts. They are thoughts attached to the real trade and cause movement; action that the trade wouldn't have caused. This is the reason to have trading rules and a system that is simple and direct and doesn't move you out of the real trade; once you leave the real trade to investigate all the other possible symbols around it, you can become confused and lost.

The tiger is innocent until it eats me. The trade is fine until it breaks one of my trading rules. Then I can move. Trades aren't like tigers, once they start eating me I can get away very easily, it won't kill me. I start getting afraid when I see the tiger, even if it is a mile away and is not really a threat to eat me yet. This fear can show up in trading, that as soon as I enter (see) the trade, I start to become afraid and as it gets closer or I start looking at all the possibilities around it "it could go down", "this doesn't feel right", "I've made a mistake", "this could drop out of sight if some news hit", " I could lose all my money (life)" or "—(you put your favorite in here)---" .

None of these thoughts are real or true but they can move you to action if you decide to believe them. A quality of the good trader is patience and to wait for time to move so price can move. Time and price are always in balance, so to make a lot of money (price movement) a lot of time movement is needed to balance it. This doesn't mean you need to be in a trade for a long time, although this is one way; it could mean that prior to your trade there was a consolidation, or a distribution period where a lot of time may have taken place but little price change.

Now time is over balanced and price can make a larger move in less time to balance it. A sharp up or down move is probable and an opportunity to make money in a short time period. But it can seem like the tiger is running straight at you, and if you need to keep the other thoughts of running away or shooting the tiger; it will stop the flow of money, the price move. You have been waiting patiently for these opportunities so don't stop it too quickly. It's not going to eat you or kill you, it's a trade and you can get out and get out with a larger portion of this price move, money.

C 1.19 What are we calling truth?

When I watch two people that are arguing, expressing differing points of view, it is a great exercise to see if I can see "truth". What is truth? Let's say for right now that truth is reality or what is physically real, what we all see, feel, hear and know the same way. If we all see a red apple on the table in front of us, this is the truth; we are all in agreement. If one person sees a red Delicious apple, one a red Jonathan apple and another sees a red Macintosh apple then we don't agree on the truth of what is really there.
If this were to happen in the market where I didn't see the truth of whether the market was going up or down then it would be very hard to trade and make money. I can't do a lot about the truth of the data feed I receive; I have to assume it is real and ok. What I do need to be aware of is, do I see the symbols on the screen and know when it is going up and going down.

At first we may say, well sure I know, all I have to do is look at the bars and the direction it is moving. But we all know if it were this easy the market won't work because everyone would do the right thing and no one would be wrong. So even though it is right in front of me there are many ways to look at it.

What needs to enter into the discussion here is our old friend time. Up and down are determined by the distance traveled in a period of time, one minute may be up, three minutes is down. 10 minutes back up; so up and down is an individual perception based on a certain time period. So is it truly going up or down? The answer is yes, both are true and both are false to different people at different times and so the market has winners and losers.

How do I know when it really is truly up or down, because in reality it is only one or the other. I want to be the winner so I want to be the right one. Ok, let's see what is true; for the first one minute it went up; that is true. For the first three minutes it went down, for the first 10 minutes it went up. That's the truth or as close as we can see it in that particular way. Is it enough to be successful though, because we can trade either up or down and make money? If my trade is only going to last one minute, I better be long, if I am in for three minutes I better be short and in for 10 minutes means I better be long. That is the truth for these three time frames.

There seems to be unlimited time frames so it is important to be sure I am aware of how long I will be in the trade, it doesn't matter as much it is going up or down, it will do both, but what is the most important is how long I am going to be in the trade. Once I understand the timing, I can get in either way, just need to know when I will get out and that it is worth the wait.

My fear is that it will go the wrong way and never come back and I'll be trapped in the trade going the wrong way forever. Ok that's possible I guess but forever is a long time; it may help to see if the market I am trading has ever done this and how many times. See how long it was and study the past to see if I can relieve my fears or if not I can make a plan to not trade this or at least keep this from happening. An underlying fear about trading will keep me from being confident and clear, it will add to my stress and make me less efficient and not able to make money.

Another way to look at truth: everything that I perceive in reality is true because it has been created in space and time and is reflected back to me. This is called three dimensions, physical reality, form; whatever I want to call this place I am living in. "We" means; all of us here in this place, this group, this world, this human body existence. "I" am here too, but I can also be not here! This is important to get, because trading is a physical real world event and if I'm not aware of where I am, my actions in the market will be affected.

How can I not be here? Well let's all sit in a room and look around and we will agree we are all here; now everyone closes their eyes and thinks of a favorite vacation place they would like to be in right now. Now everyone is gone, no one knows where anyone is except the person thinking it and even though the bodies are still in 63203.5the room the people aren't. Yes the body can be sitting in front of the computer with the bars moving on the screen and nobody is there.

If I'm going to trade a real market I must be there and see it, not think I know something different, like think I know where the market is going. As soon as I think I know something about the future market I don't see the real market. Ever tried to drive a car you are going to get tomorrow? You can't, in fact when you are "thinking that" you can't even drive the one you already have.

Another interesting thing is to notice even when I am here seeing what is happening now, how much of it do I see? Ten people see an accident and then they all report what they saw. You will get 10 different observations because they all notice different things. When you look at a chart you may not see what another person sees. This is quite normal and really ok if what you are seeing is enough for you to determine if your system to trade is indicating a profitable trade. On the other hand if you are looking for something that someone else sees and trying to use that to trade, well that's a little more complicated and less likely to be profitable. You see what you see, not what someone else sees.

C 1.20 Desire, What's it all about?

The Fisherman and the Investment Banker

An investment banker was at the pier of a small coastal Mexican village when a small boat with just one fisherman docked. Inside the small boat were several large yellow fin tuna. The man complimented the fisherman on the quality of his fish and asked how long it took to catch them.

The fisherman replied, only a little while.

The man then asked why didn't he stay out longer and catch more fish?

The fisherman said he had enough to support his family's immediate needs.

The man then asked, "but what do you do with the rest of your time?"

The fisherman said, "I sleep late, fish a little, play with my children, take siesta with my wife, Maria, stroll into the village each evening where I sip wine and play guitar with my amigos, I have a full and busy life."

The man scoffed, "I am a Harvard MBA and could help you. You should spend more time fishing and with the proceeds, buy a bigger boat with the proceeds from the bigger boat you could buy several boats, eventually you would have a fleet of fishing boats. Instead of selling your catch to a middleman you would sell directly to the processor, eventually opening your own cannery. You would control the product, processing and distribution. You would need to leave this small coastal fishing village and move to Mexico City, then LA and eventually NYC where you will run your expanding enterprise."

The fisherman asked, "But, how long will this all take?"

To which the man replied, "15-20 years." "But what then?"

The man laughed and said that's the best part. "When the time is right you would announce an IPO and sell your company stock to the public and become very rich, you would make millions."

"Millions. Then what?"

The man said, "Then you would retire. Move to a small coastal fishing village where you would sleep late, fish a little, play with your kids, take siesta with your wife, stroll to the village in the evenings where you could sip wine and play your guitar with your amigos."

The above story that has been around for a long time, it's a classic in a sense, an example of how we can be focused on attaining something that is already ours. We can spend a lot of time and effort trying to get what is already in our possession or within our inherent nature. As traders, we can have a hard long drawn out process finding the successful way to trade because we are looking in the wrong place. We are looking outside our self for the Holy Grail and we already have it.

What do I really want? Until I am clear, it may be a long journey doing a lot of work to get to what is really my core desire. Not that the journey can't be great, it should be, but it can also be an efforting experience that one is doing to get to the experience we want, to get to the fun or happiness we are really seeking. If it isn't fun right now, then I am doing something wrong, I am doing something other than what I really want to do and I am off course.

The good life isn't around the corner. The good life is either right here or I haven't made up my mind yet, I am lost and still looking for clarity, for a mind that will let me be at peace and enjoy this moment. There is only one moment, and it is right now.

C 1.21 Surrender

Render = melt
Sur = higher, super
To melt into your higher self

C 1.22 Nature's Simplicity

Change is an interesting concept. Appears to be a function of what is held and not held within a viewpoint, as opposed to some external variable. External variables, the content of the Universe, are cyclically balanced. Internal viewpoints are cyclically balanced but not necessarily congruent with the Universe.

Many years ago the accepted internal viewpoint was that the earth was flat and the center of the Universe. This works fine until that viewpoint receives more awareness that no longer validates the internally balanced construct. Change must then occur to resolve the new viewpoint and bring it into harmony with the newly discovered external. Change is a function of internal awareness, not external variables. The reliability of the constancy of external variables is necessary for reality to be available for multiple internal viewpoints. (If external was inconsistent in space / time, the construct of viewable reality may be hard pressed to exist.)

When it was time to change the concept of the Earth is flat, the Earth is the center of the Universe, the Sun is the center of the Universe, etc; it was the internal viewpoint that changed and not the external. The internal viewpoint is where change occurs.

The internal viewpoint has been correlated to the external through mathematical equivalence. A = B. When the equation requires an adjusting term (some constant?)A = hB what is happening is that the internal viewpoint is adjusting the equation so as to balance the relativistic inequality.

Planck's constant is a good example of adjusting not the viewpoint but the mathematical evidence.

The correlation of proving the Earth was the center of the Universe brought many creative mathematical gyrations to hold on to the old view. Eventually reality comes into the internal and it's very simple and straight forward.

An example of a less than simple viewpoint is to use AU (Astronomical Unit) as the yard stick for celestial measurement. It seems a little archaic to use Earth, a third planet in a solar system as unity (1). Like starting the yard stick on 3" instead of 1". What may make more sense is to use Mercury as unity (1) if we are going to use this type of measure, which in fact reveals a very simple harmonic proportionality of cycles and distance between planets that is quite sublime.

Ever wonder why Rene Descartes created the Cartesian coordinate system using cubic space? This is still* the foundation of proving mathematical relevance between internal and external. I would assume 99+% of the mathematically coordinated internal to external is done through a manipulated orthogonal matrix.

Measuring a cubical structure is simple in an orthogonal cubic matrix, but measuring a spherical, tetrahedral, icosahedral structure isn't as natural. Measuring a tetrahedron in a tetrahedral matrix is very simple and natural. Planck's constant is needed because energy isn't a cubic structure in some forms.

Charts

The charts included here have clues to more of the story if you want to read the story. It is an external view, it is from my viewpoint, so you don't have to see this, but you may want to expand your scope of seeing.

Relax what you think you are seeing and let it appear as it is. Then notice what you do to each chart as you "think" about it from the core beliefs you have established to this point in your journey. You could look at these again in a few months or years and they would appear differently if you have changed your foundational core with new information. If you know what you are looking for you can find it. If you are just looking, you will just see what you are looking at.
